Trust.

1. A trust, in the modern and confined sense of the word (a), is a confidence reposed in a person with respect to property of which he has possession or over which he can exercise a power to the intent that he may hold the property or exercise the power for the benefit of some other person or object (b).

(a) The word "trust" was regarded in Blackstone's time as including certain transactions cognisable in a court of law, such as deposits, bailments, and implied undertakings to account for money received to another's use (3 Bl. Com. 432). "Wherever persons agree concerning any particular subject, that, in a court of equity as against the party himself and any claiming under him voluntarily or with notice, raises a trust" (Legard v. Hodges (1792), 1 Ves. 477, per Lord THURLOW, L.C., at p. 478). In reference to real estate, and for the purpose of the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 10), it may, if the context so requires or admits, be construed as synonymous with "use" (1 Cru. Dig., tit. 12, Trust, s. 1 (2); Bushell v. Burland (1708), Holt (K. B.), 733, 736; Altham (Lord) v. Anglessea (Lord) (1709), 11 Mod. Rep. 210, per HOLT, C.J., at p. 211; Burgess v. Wheate, A.-G. v. Wheate (1759), 1 Eden, 177, per Lord MANSFIELD, C.J., at p. 217; Doe d. Terry v. Collier (1809), 11 East, 377, 380; Re Brooke, Brooke v. Brooke, [1894] 1 Ch. 43, per CHITTY, J., at p. 48). The Statute of Uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 10) united the estates of the legal tenant in fee simple and of the cestui que use; but a redivision of them was effected by limiting the use to the feoffee, who was declared a trustee, and then, there being one use which the statute executed and another which it did not, trusts succeeded uses. For as there could not be a use upon a use it took the name of a trust, and as the law would not meddle with it equity did so (Burgess v. Wheate, A.-G. v. Wheate, supra, per CLARKE, M.R., at p. 194; and see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 271 et seq.).

(b) Co. Litt. 272 b; Burgess v. Wheate, A.-G. v. Wheate, supra, per HENLEY, Lord Keeper, at p. 240; Wilson v. Bury (Lord) (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 518, C. A., per BRETT, L.J., at pp. 530, 531; Dooby v. Watson (1888), 39 Ch. D. 178, per KEKEWICH, J., at pp. 181, 182; Re Barney, Barney v. Barney, [1892] 2 Ch. 265, per KEKEWICH, J., at p. 272; Re Williams, Williams v. Williams, [1897] 2 Ch. 12, C. A., per LINDLEY, L.J., at pp. 18, 19. A trust is the binding of the conscience of one to the intention of another (Bacon, Reading upon the Statute of Uses, p. 9). An obligation to do an act with respect to property creates a trust (Fleeming v. Howden (1868), L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 372, per Lord WESTBURY, at p. 383). The object of the trust is generally some person or persons; but it may be some private or public purpose; see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 106 et seq., 114 et seq. A guardianship is a trust (Beaufort (Duke) v. Berty (1721), 1 P. Wms. 703, per Lord MACCLESFIELD, L.C., at p. 705; Mathew v. Brise (1851), 14 Beav. 341, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 345; and see title INFANTS AND CHILDREN, Vol. XVII., pp. 117, 121 et seq.). An agency is not in itself a trust (Cave v. Mackenzie (1877), 46 L. J. (CH.) 564), but may in certain circumstances involve a trust; see pp. 58, 206, post; title AGENCY, Vol. I., pp. 157, 182, 184. The existence of a contractual relationship, such as, for instance, that of banker and customer (Foley v. Hill (1848), 2 H. L. Cas. 28), does not constitute a trust (Ferguson v. Wilson (1866), 2 Ch. App. 77, per TURNER, L.J., at pp. 87, 88; Wilson v. Bury (Lord), supra, at pp. 530, 531; Soar v. Ashwell, [1893] 2 Q. B. 390, C. A., per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 393). As to the

It is an equitable obligation or, in other words, is enforceable only in a court in which equity is administered (c).

2. The person in whom the confidence is reposed is called a trustee (d), and the person for whose benefit the trust is to be exercised is called a cestui que trust (e), or sometimes a beneficiary (f).

The trustee is possessed of the property or power in a fiduciary capacity, and stands in a fiduciary relation to the cestui que trust (g). A person may be at the same time trustee and one of the cestuis que trust (h).

3. The property affected by the confidence is called the trust property or trust estate. It is usually in the legal ownership, or under the legal control of the trustee (i). The cestui

As to powers in the nature of trusts, see p. 17, post: title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 69 et seq. The trustee must have the legal possession or control of the property, which would be complete but for the equitable interest therein of the cestui que trust (Re Barney, Barney v. Barney, [1892] 2 Ch. 265, 272, 273, 276).

(d) 21 Vin. Abr. 508 et seq. A trustee is a person holding the legal title to property under an express or implied agreement to apply it and the income arising from it to the use and benefit of another person (Wilson v. Bury (Lord) (1880), 5 Q. B. D. 518, C. A., per BRETT, L.J., at pp. 330, 531). In a broad sense every person who has the legal ownership of property in which another person has a beneficial interest is a trustee for that person (Story, s. 964, 2nd ed. (1892), pp. 626, 627). But funds in the hands of public officials for distribution among certain persons are not trust funds of which they are trustees for such persons (Grenville-Murray v. Clarendon (Earl) (1869), L. R. 9 Eq. 11; Kinloch v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1880), 15 Ch. D. 1, C. A.). As to a bare trustee, see pp. 86, 87, post; and as to a constructive trustee and a trustee de son tort, see pp. 87 et seq., post.

(h) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 50; see pp. 65, 66, 80, 81, post.

(i) Re Barney, Barney v. Barney, supra, at pp. 272, 273, 276. A trustee may have merely an equitable estate in property which is legally vested in another person (Head v. Teynham (Lord) (1783), 1 Cox, Eq. Cas. 57; Pole v. Pass (1839), 1 Beav. 600; Knight v. Bowyer (1857), 23 Beav. 609, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 635; and see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 155, note (m)); but there can be no trust where there is not a legal estate in the trust property co-extensive with it (Burgess v. Wheate, A.-G.

4. Trusts are either (1) express, which are created by the actual terms of some instrument or declaration (l), or (2) constructive, or implied, which arise when property, to which no express trust is for the time being attached, is acquired or held by a person in circumstances which render him bound in equity to hold it in trust for the benefit of some other person or object as cestui que trust or beneficiary (m).

Express or trusts.

5. Express trusts may be either (1) executed, or (2) executory. A trust is executed in the technical sense where the terms of the trust are designated by the instrument or declaration creating it (n), even though the creator directs a settlement to be executed embodying the designated provisions (o). A trust is executory in the technical sense where the instrument or declaration by which it is created directs the subsequent execution of an instrument

D. 614, per FRY, J., at p. 617; and see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 154, 155. Where there is no actual evidence of an express trust, but the court considers that the circumstances necessarily point to its having been created, it is called a presumptive trust (Cook v. Fountain (1676), 3 Swan. 585, per Lord NOTTINGHAM, L.C., at p. 591).

(m) Bac. Abr., tit. Uses and Trusts, Trusts (C.); Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 8; Cook v. Fountain, supra, per Lord NOTTINGHAM, L.C., at p. 591; Fitzgerald v. Stewart, supra, at p. 460; Petre v. Petra (1852), 1 Drew. 371, per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., at p. 393; and see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 155, 156. A constructive trust is a trust to be made out by circumstances (Soar v. Ashwell, [1893] 2 Q.B. 390, C. A., per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 396). Trusts are neither created nor implied by law to defeat the intentions of donors or settlors. They are created or implied, or held to result in favour of donors or settlors, in order to carry out and give effect to the true intentions of the donors or settlors, whether expressed or implied (Standing v. Bowring (1885), 31 Ch. D. 282, C. A., per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 289; and see pp. 12 et seq., post). The law never implies, and the court never presumes, a trust unless it is absolutely necessary to do so (Cook v. Fountain, supra, at pp. 591, 592).

(n) Glenorehy (Lord) v. Bosville (1733), Cas. temp. Talb. 3, per Lord TALBOT, L.C., at p. 19. Generally, a trust is executed when the creator of it has been his own conveyancer in defining it (Franks v. Price (1839), 3 Beav. 182; Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl) (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 1, 61, 210; Doncaster v. Doncaster (1856), 3 K. & J. 26; Fullerton v. Martin (1860), 1 Drew. & Sm. 31; De Havilland v. De Saumarez, De Havilland v. Bingham (1865), 14 W. R. 118; Re Nelley's Trusts (1877), 26 W. R. 88). A trust or bequest of personal estate "to be enjoyed with and go with the title" to a peerage is executed and not executory (Re Johnston, Cockerell v. Essex (Earl) (1884), 26 Ch. D. 538).

6. A precatory trust is a trust created by precatory words, such as expressions of confidence, request, or desire that property will or shall be applied for the benefit of a definite person or object, where these words are construed in equity as imperatively constituting a trust (q).

Secret trusts.

7. A secret trust is created where property is in law given to a person either absolutely or upon an indefinite trust, but there has been an undertaking by him or an understanding between him and the donor, not clothed with the requisite formalities for the creation of a legal trust, that it shall be applied for the benefit of some other person or object (r).

Constructive resulting, and other implied
trusts.

8. Constructive or implied trusts may be subdivided into (1) constructive trusts, where property not otherwise subject to a trust becomes by the law trust property (s); (2) resulting trusts, where the law imposes on trust property a trust not expressed at the time when the trust was created (t); and (3) trusts implied from contractual or other relations subsisting between parties (u).

(p) Glenorchy (Lord) v. Bosville (1733), Cas. temp. Talb. 3; Bagshaw v. Spencer (1748), 1 Wils. 238; and see pp. 22 et seq., post. In one sense all trusts are executory, since they have to be executed or carried out by the trustee (Bellamy v. Burrow (1735), Cas. temp. Talb. 97; Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke) (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 559, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at pp. 570 et seq.; Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl) (1853), 4 H. L. Cas. 1, per Lord ST. LEONARDS, at pp. 61, 210). In some cases it is a doubtful point whether a trust is executed or executory (Jervoise v. Northumberland (Duke), supra, at pp. 570 et seq.). In all cases of executory trusts something is left to the judgment of the trustees (Stanley v. Lennard (1758), 1 Eden, 87, per HENLEY, Lord Keeper, at p. 95).

(q) Knight v. Knight (1840), 3 Beav. 148, per Lord LANGDALE, M.R., at pp. 171 et seq.; see pp. 13 et seq., post. The expression "precatory trust" is a roundabout way of saying that the court finds that there is a trust, although the trust is not expressed as such, but by words of prayer or suggestion (Re Sanson, Sanson v. Turner (1896), 12 T. L. R. 142, per CHITTY, J.). It is in fact a misleading nickname (Re Williams, Williams v. Williams, [1897] 2 Ch. 12, C. A., per RIGBY, L.J., at p. 27).

(s) See p. 7, ante, pp. 47 et seq., post.

A., per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 393, per BOWEN, L.J., at p. 396, and per KAY, L.J., at pp. 400, 405; and see pp. 58 et seq., post. A person affected with a constructive trust becomes a constructive trustee (Soar v. Ashwell, supra, at p. 393). This term is also applied to a stranger who by his conduct becomes affected with an express trust, and the trust so affecting him is sometimes called a constructive trust (Barnes v. Addy (1874), 9 Ch. App. 244, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 251; Soar v. Ashwell, supra, per KAY, L.J., at pp. 400, 405). It has, however, been suggested that in such circumstances the trust remains an express trust and that the stranger who by his conduct has become affected by it is, more properly speaking, an express trustee de son tort (Soar v. Ashwell, supra, per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 394).

A devise of this nature is construed, not as an equitable remainder (i), but as an executory limitation (j).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Creation of Trusts.

(i.) In General.

Mode of
declaration.

12. A trust may be created inter vivos or by will (k).

A declaration of trust of real estate must be made or proved by a writing signed by the person who creates it (l). The trust need not be constituted by the writing; it is sufficient if the writing is evidence of the fact of the trust (m). The writing must, however, show its terms and not merely its existence (a). A writing is not necessary to support a trust which is actually in course of being carried out by the person alleged to be a trustee (b); nor will the absence of a writing enable a person who knows that land was conveyed to him as a trustee to claim it as his own (c). Similarly, in the case of partnership property the absence of writing is immaterial (d). A declaration after bankruptcy is effectual if the trust existed before (e).

Declaration of trust without transfer of property.

A trust of personal estate inter vivos may be declared either in writing (f) or by parol (g).

13. A person or corporation capable of disposing of property or of an interest therein by way of trust (h) may at any time create a trust thereof by a declaration made in the proper legal mode (i) to the effect that it shall be thenceforth held in trust for a specified person or object (k). A declaration of trust of real property by a married woman made with the formalities required by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (l), is a disposition by her within that Act (m), which binds the property as against her heir (a). On the other hand, a declaration of trust by a tenant in tail of real property is not such an assurance as under the Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833 (b), will bar his estate tail therein (c).

A declaration of trust concerning property by any writing, other than a will or an instrument chargeable with ad valorem duty as a settlement, is chargeable with a stamp duty of 10s. (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, Sched. I., title "Declaration"). As to stamp duties generally, see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 700 et seq.

If a person adds money of his own to a fund which he holds in trust and declares that he has done so, it is a good declaration of trust of that money (Thorpe v. Owen (1842), 5 Beav. 224; Gray v. Gray (1852), 2 Sim. (N. S.) 273).

(k) If the property is at the time vested in the disposer, he declares that he himself will thenceforth so hold it in trust, or to that effect (Scott v. Bentley (1855), 1 K. & J. 281; Richards v. Delbridge (1874), L. R. 18 Eq. 11, per JESSEL, M.R., at pp. 14, 15; Kelly v. Walsh (1878), 1 L. R. Ir. 275). If it is vested at his disposal in another person, he declares or directs that such other person shall so hold it, or to that effect (Rycroft v. Christy (1840), 3 Beav. 238; Bentley v. Mackay (1851), 15 Beav. 12; Moore v. Darton (1851), 4 De G. & Sm. 517; Paterson v. Murphy (1853), 11 Hare, 88, 92). An effectual declaration of trust may be made by entries in books of account and memoranda (Salter v. Cavanagh (1838), 1 Dr. & Wal. 668, 686; Stapleton v. Stapleton (1844), 14 Sim. 186; Vandenberg v. Palmer (1858), 4 K. & J. 204; Evans v. Jennings (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 551; Re Glover (1862), 2 John. & H. 186; Patrick v. Simpson (1880), 24 Q. Hind* (1889), 58 L. J. (CH.) 703, C. A.; Re Cozens, Green v. Brisley, [1913] 2 Ch. 478). A power of attorney may amount to a declaration of trust (Ex parte Pye, Ex parte Dubost (1811), 18 Ves. 140, 150; Airey v. Hall (1856), 3 Sm. & G. 315). But the approval of an incomplete draft of a trust instrument does not create a binding trust (Re Sykes's Trusts (1862), 2 John. & H. 415).

How far a bill of sale.

14. A declaration of trust in writing of personal chattels without transfer, if it otherwise falls within the terms of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (d), is a bill of sale within the meaning of that Act (e).

Declaration of trust on transfer of property.

15. On a transfer of property or of an interest in property, which of itself would vest the beneficial ownership thereof in the transferee, the declaration of trust may be made by the instrument of transfer, if any, or by another instrument taking effect contemporaneously with the instrument of transfer, or, in the case of a transfer of personal estate inter vivos, by a contemporaneous parol declaration (f).

Declaration
subsequent to transfer.

16. Where a transfer of property is made to a person in such a manner or in such circumstances that he is thereby constituted a trustee thereof for the disposer and not the absolute owner, the disposer may at any time afterwards declare a specific trust of the property (g).

(ii.) Declaratory Words.

Certainty of language.

17. A trust can be created by any language which is clear enough to show an intention to create it (h). In order to create a trust there must be (1) a declaration which is or can be construed as imperative in its terms; (2) a designation of the subject-matter or property to be affected by it within the limits permitted by law; and (3) a designation of the object or the person or persons to be benefited by it within the limits permitted by law (i).

SECT. 2.
Express Trusts.

Imperative declaration.

18. In declaring a trust the word "usually and technically" employed is "trust," or, more rarely, "use" or "confidence" (k). A trust may, however, be created by the general tenor of an instrument without the use of these words (l). When the creator of the trust is to be the trustee, any expressions will suffice from which it is clear that the party using them considers himself a trustee and adopts that character (m). A promise to declare a trust may be sufficient (n); but a promise or an expression of intention, or to give an imperfect gift, is not effectual as a declaration of trust (o). In case of doubt the contemporaneous and subsequent acts of the settlor may be looked at (p).

19. In testamentary instruments a trust may be created by words intimating a request (q), entreaty (r), recommendation (s),

as imperative.

The word "use" is a proper word to create a trust (Atkinson v. Atkinson (1890), 62 L. T. 735, per FRY, L.J., at p. 736). The word "confidence" was the old name for trust, and may now by virtue of the context be of the same efficacy as the word "trust" (Eaton v. Watts (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 151, per STUART, V.-C., at p. 155).

SECT. 2.

Express Trusts.

Desire as to employment of a person.

Language negating trust.

Trusts by imposition of a condition.

Trust by creation of a charge.

'word "trust" or an express declaration of trust in a will is construed as merely precatory or recommendatory (l).

20. A direction or desire or recommendation in a will that a particular person shall be employed as agent or in some other capacity in connexion with the testator's estate does not create a trust in his favour (m).

21. A trust will not be imposed where the language of the disposer expressly negatives his intention to impose a trust (n).

22. Where property is given to a person upon condition that he does a certain act or confers a certain benefit on another person, the condition may constitute a trust if it is directed to be, or must necessarily be, performed and satisfied out of the property, and consequently imposes a fiduciary obligation in respect of the property (o); but it will not be construed as a trust if this is not the case and the condition merely imposes a collateral duty (p). Similarly, a devise of land upon condition of paying a sum of money or an annuity does not create a trust, though it may create a charge (q).

23. A charge does not in itself create a trust (r), but it may do so if it is coupled with other trusts or the context otherwise so requires (s). Conversely a trust may amount merely to a charge (t).

PART I.—TRUSTS.

24. Where a person, in terms which import a duty to exercise the power, is empowered to apply property for the benefit of such members of a specified class of beneficiaries as he in his discretion thinks fit, and there is no gift over in the event of his not exercising the power, a trust is created in favour of the class; and the whole class, if and so far as the trustee does not exercise his discretion, takes the property in equal shares (a). The power does not, however, assume the nature of a trust if there is a gift over in the event of its not being exercised (b), or if the language does not intimate an intention to make the exercise of the power a duty, or to benefit the class otherwise than by the exercise of the power (c).

Express
Trusts.

Power in the nature of a trust.

A power given by will to trustees to confer a benefit on a person in an event which virtually takes place in the testator's lifetime may confer the benefit on that person (d).

(iii.) Designation of Subject-matter or Property.

25. In order to raise a trust, the property to be affected by it must be either expressly designated (e) or so defined that it is capable of being ascertained (f). Otherwise the trust is void for uncertainty (g).

Certainty of subject-matter.

SECT. 2.
Express Trusts.

Trust of residue of a fund.

Trust of future fund.
Certainty of objects.

A trust of the residue of a fund after a gift thereof of an undefined amount for an object which for any cause fails will be an effectual trust of the whole fund (h).

26. A trust may be declared of a fund contingently on the fund subsequently coming into existence (i).

(iv.) Designation of Objects or Persons to be Benefited.

27. Except where the objects are charitable, in which case some latitude is allowed (j), the objects or persons to be benefited by a trust must be expressly designated (k), or so defined that they are capable of being ascertained (l). Otherwise the trust is void for uncertainty (m), and there is a resulting trust (n).

936). Where a fund is given in trust as to a part, the amount of which is capable of being ascertained, for an object which fails, and as to the remainder for another object, the gift is held to fail as to the part but to be good as to the remainder (Milford v. Reynolds (1842), 1 Ph. 185; Re Vaughan, Vaughan v. Thomas (1886), 33 Ch. D. 187; and in the case of charitable trusts, see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 148 et seq.). 28. Where several objects are designated, a discretion may be given to the trustees as to which shall be benefited and in what proportions (o).

29. Trustees may be given a discretion as to the mode in which a designated object or person shall be benefited (p). If they fail to exercise the discretion through inability to do so or otherwise, the object or person nevertheless takes under the trust (a).

30. Trustees may be given power to vary the object or person to be benefited by the trust (b). Where they have an absolute discretion as to the conversion of the trust property either from realty into personalty or from personalty into realty, their exercise or non-exercise of the discretion may affect the respective rights to the trust property of the real or personal representatives of a beneficiary who dies while the trust is subsisting (c).

Ir. 273), or of money "to be given in private charity" (Ommaney v. Butcher (1823), Turn. & R. 260), is void for uncertainty. A trust is void where the directions are so vague that it cannot be said what the testator meant, so that he has in effect given to someone else power to make a will for him instead of making a will for himself (Grimond (or Macintyre) v. Grimond, supra, per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 126); but a trust for such charities and other public purposes as lawfully may be in a named parish is good (Dolan v. Macdermot (1868), 3 Ch. App. 676). It seems to follow from Hott v. Nairne (1876), 3 Ch. D. 278, that a trust of a sum of money wherewith to buy an advowson and present "such fit and proper person as" the trustees may in their uncontrolled discretion select, is valid. A trust of property does not depend on the immediate existence of a legal estate in a trustee to support it (h).

A settlement of a policy of assurance is complete without notice to the assurance office (i), and a settlement of an equitable interest in stock is complete without notice to the trustees (k).

*34. Where a person either under a legal instrument inter vivos or under a testamentary instrument is given property either absolutely or upon an indefinite trust, but there has been some parol or written undertaking or understanding between him and the disposer of the property, not clothed with the requisite formalities for creating a trust in law, that he will hold it in trust for some particular person or object, that trust, if it can take effect (b), is enforced in equity on the ground that his failure to perform it would be an act of fraud (c); if, on the other hand, the trust is for an object which is prohibited by law, the gift is void (d). Where, however, the intended trust, though not actually void in law, cannot take effect (e), or is not communicated to the donee, or is not assented to by the donee during the lifetime of the disposer, or, in the case of a transaction inter vivos, before the donee has otherwise lawfully dealt with the property, the following rules apply, namely:—(1) If the gift is to the donee ostensibly for his own benefit (f) he is regarded both in law and in equity as entitled to the property, so that if he applies it for the benefit of the object secretly indicated by the disposer, he does so as a voluntary gift from himself (g); and (2) if

36. Where the property is given to more than one on an undertaking or understanding with one of them that it shall be held in trust for some particular person or object, the question whether the interest of the other donee under the gift is affected depends upon the time when the undertaking or understanding was entered into. Both donees are bound if the undertaking or understanding was entered into on behalf of both previously to or at the time of the making of the gift, although it was without the knowledge or consent of the other donee (l); but it is otherwise if the undertaking or understanding is entered into by one only after the gift has been made (m). The fact of the gift being to the two as tenants in common, or otherwise separately, strengthens the case in favour of the interest of the other not being affected (n).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Executory Trusts.

Construction.

37. An executory trust, where the declaration of trust is in the form of a direction to create by a subsequent instrument certain trusts not defined with absolute precision by the disposer (o), is not, like an executed trust (p), construed according to the legal effect of the language used, but is construed so as best to give effect to the apparent intention of the disposer (q).

SECT. 2.
Express
Trusts.

39. Where the disposer has clearly contemplated a succession of beneficial interests in the trust property, or a strict settlement, equity either directs the limitation of life interests with remainders in tail or in fee simple or absolutely, as the case may be, notwithstanding that the words used in declaring the trust legally imply the immediate limitation to the first beneficiaries of an estate in fee simple (s) or in tail (t), or an absolute interest (a); or otherwise directs a strict settlement so far as the lawful methods of conveyancing will admit (b).

Where the assistance of the trustees, which is ultimately the assistance of the court of equity having jurisdiction in the matter, is necessary to complete the limitations expressed in the declaration of trust, the fact that the limitations were not completely declared by the disposer is sufficient evidence of his intention that they should be further modelled; but where they have been completely declared by the disposer, there is no authority for interfering and making them different from what they would be at law (*Austen v. trusts and valid.

42. In creating the trusts directed by the disposer, equity directs the insertion of ancillary trusts and powers not expressly contemplated by him (f).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Considerations Affecting the Validity of Trusts.

43. A trust in order to be valid must not only be effectually created, but must also conform to the principles of law which regulate the disposition of property.

The question whether a trust is lawful depends on (1) whether it is created in good faith; (2) whether the disposer can by law affect with the trust the property or subject-matter to which it is annexed; and (3) whether the object or person in whose favour it is created can by law be benefited by it. If a trust fails in any one of these particulars it is illegal and void (g).

Property
capable of being affected with a trust.

44. Any property or interest in property which a person can at law or in equity transfer or assign, or dispose of inter vivos, or by a testamentary instrument, can be affected by him with a trust by an instrument inter vivos or by a testamentary instrument (h).

Elton* (No. 2) (1860), 27 Beav. 634; Re Parrott, Walter v. Parrott (1886), 33 Ch. D. 274, C. A. (restraint on anticipation). Powers of sale and exchange are inserted where no contrary intention is indicated (Elton v. Elton (No. 2), supra; Wise v. Piper (1880), 13 Ch. D. 848); and for the purposes of sale the trustees are held to be trustees under the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), and the amending Acts (Re Garnett Orme and Hargreave's Contract (1883), 25 Ch. D. 595).

(g) Trusts are valid or void on the same principles as legal estates (Burgess v. Wheate, A.-G. v. Wheate (1759), 1 Eden, 177, per CLARKE, M.R., at p. 195; and see pp. 25 et seq., 57, 58, post). But as to objects in whose favour a legal disposition cannot be made but a valid trust can be created, see p. 25, post. The assurance of the property to a trustee who cannot legally hold it does not invalidate the trust (Sonley v. Clockmakers' Co. (Master etc.) (1780), 1 Bro. C. C. 80).

(h) Trusts and legal estates are governed by the same rules (Bac. Abr. 251, tit. Uses and Trusts (A); Burgess v. Wheate, A.-G. v. Wheate, supra). As to the inalienability of real property granted by the Crown or Parliament as a reward for distinguished public services, see title GIFTS, Vol. XV., p. 408. Chattels, or an interest in chattels, can in some cases be disposed of in equity when not assignable at law (Joseph v. Lyons (1884), 15 Q. B. D. 280, C. A., per BRETT, M.R., at p. 284; Hallas v. Robinson (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 288, C. A., per BAGGALLAY, L.J., at p. 292 (future goods)); see title PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., p. 410. A life interest with remainders cannot be created in live stock or consumable articles (Dandall v. Russell (1817), 3 Mer. 190; Andrew v. Andrew (1845), 1 Coll. 688, 690; Twining v. Powell (1845), 2 Coll. 262, 268; Phillips v. Beal (No. 1) (1862), 32 Beav. 25; Cockayne v. Harrison (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 432, per Lord ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 434), except where they form part of the stock in trade of a business (Groves v. Wright (1856), 2 K. & J. 347; Phillips v. Beal (No. 1), supra; Cockayne v. Harrison, supra; Myers v. Washbrook, [1901] 1 K. B. 360). As to trusts of heirlooms and other chattels settled with realty, see title SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 703 et seq.

45. A trust can be created in favour of any person or object to which a gift can in law be given direct (i). A trust can also be created in favour of a lawful object to which a gift cannot be directly given by reason of there being no hand to receive it (k). Thus, a trust for the benefit of animals serviceable to man is legal (l), though a trust for wild animals is not (m). Similarly, a trust to erect a monument, and keep it in repair for a period not exceeding some specified life or lives and twenty-one years afterwards, is a legal trust (n).

SECT. 2.

Lawful objects of a trust.

46. Trusts of the nature of executory devises and corresponding trusts of personal property, including chattels real, are valid within the same limits of perpetuity as the law prescribes with respect to executory devises (o). Equitable remainders and reversions and future interests can be barred and destroyed in the same manner and by the same process as legal estates of the same description (p).

Trusts
analogous to executory devises.

47. Where the creation of a trust is made for a fraudulent purpose or otherwise than in good faith, or is procured by misrepresentation, fraud, or other undue means, the trust is voidable in the same manner as a direct assurance which is executed in similar circumstances (q).

Express Trusts.

Charitable and public trusts.

Useless trusts.

Immoral and illegal trusts.

Discretionary trusts.

48. Trusts for charities and for public purposes are subject to restrictions, the non-observance of which, in any case, renders the trust void or voidable (r).

49. A trust for a useless purpose is void (s).

50. A trust is illegal and cannot be enforced in equity if it is created for an object or purpose in favour of which a direct gift or a contract cannot be enforced in law on the ground of being immoral or otherwise contrary to public policy or illegal (t).

51. A discretionary trust for a variety of objects or purposes, some legal and some illegal, in the disjunctive or alternative according as the trustees may select, is valid so far as respects the legal objects or purposes, and the trustees may exercise their discretionary selection in respect of the objects or purposes which are legal, but they cannot validly do so in respect of those which are illegal (u). The alternative discretion in favour of the legal objects must, however, be clearly conferred (w). If the trust is expressly for certain objects and purposes, some legal and some illegal, the question whether the trust is wholly valid or wholly void, or is partly valid and partly void, depends upon the particular form of the trust (x). If the portion of the property which would have had to be applied to the illegal purpose, supposing it to have been legal, has been prescribed or can be ascertained, the trust, so far as relates to the legal purpose, will be upheld (y). Where, therefore, it is in the form of a trust for a legal purpose of so much of the property as is not applied for the illegal purpose, and the legal purpose is charitable, it will attach to the whole of the property in favour of the legal charitable purpose (a). The same principle applies if the trust is for a legal purpose, with an illegal purpose as regards a portion of the property attached thereto (b). On the other hand, if the portion applicable to the illegal purpose has not been prescribed and cannot be ascertained, so that it is uncertain whether, if the illegal purpose could have been carried out, there would have remained any residue at all for the legal purpose, the whole trust is void (c).

52. The objects of a trust, whether single or distributive or alternative, must be indicated with sufficient precision either specifically or generally (d). If they are left entirely to the discretion of the trustees, the trust is void for vagueness and uncertainty (e).

A trust for "such charitable or public purposes" as the trustee may think proper is void for uncertainty (Blair v. Duncan, supra). But a trust for such charitable purposes as the trustee may think proper is good (Chapman v. Brown, supra, per GRANT, M.R., at p. 410; Moggridge v. Thackwell (1803), 7 Ves. 36). A trust in favour of a Roman Catholic archbishop with a desire that he should apply the property for parochial purposes in his diocese at his discretion is good; and a gift to a provincial of a monastic order for the purposes of a third order, the members of which are not bound by vows, is good, not lying for a purpose illegal under the Roman Catholic Relief Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 7) (Re Van Wart, Ramsay v. Bourne (1911), Times, 17th February); but a trust that the archbishop should apply the property as he might judge most conducive to the good of religion is void for uncertainty (Dunne v. Byrne, [1912] A. C. 407, P. C.).

A trust of capital or income for the benefit in some special manner of a person who is sui juris (o) confers on him an absolute beneficial interest in the capital or income, as the case may be (p). If the trust in his favour is not limited to his life or some shorter period, it gives him (q), or, if he becomes bankrupt, his trustee in bankruptcy (r), the right to call for a transfer of the trust property.

Special or discretionary

A trust to apply the whole or part of the income for a special purpose for the benefit of a person is, however, a trust for him of only so much as is necessary for that purpose (t); and if the trustees in such a case are given a discretion as to the amount to be applied, they are at liberty to exercise that discretion by limiting the amount (a).

Express

58. Where a trust confers in other respects an absolute estate or interest in property on a cestui que trust of full age and sound mind, whether for life or altogether, a provision in restraint of the anticipation or alienation of either the capital or the income of the property, whether by bankruptcy or otherwise, or a provision that it shall not be liable to the claims of creditors, is void (b), except where it attaches to the estate or interest of a married woman during coverture (c), since it would deprive the interest given of one of its legal incidents (d). It makes no difference that a discretion is given to the trustee as to the mode of applying the capital or income for the benefit of the cestui que trust (e).

interests of successive beneficiaries in the capital and income of the trust property (o). In the case of trusts of such property created by wills in favour of persons in succession, it is assumed in the absence of direction, to the contrary that the testator intended that all the beneficiaries should enjoy the whole property in succession (p). The trustees, therefore, must, for the sake of a beneficiary for life, realise any portions of the trust property which consist of reversions or future estates (q), and, for the sake of beneficiaries in remainder, must also realise any portions of it which are of a wasting character or of a character not authorised to be retained as investments (r), and in each case they must lay out the money so produced in permanent investments (s). Similarly, where a testator bequeaths annuities for life payable out of wasting property, it must be sold, and out of the proceeds of sale a permanent fund must be created for payment of the annuities (t). The creator of the trust may, however, clearly indicate an intention that the wasting property shall be enjoyed by the beneficiary for life in specie (a), as, for instance, by its being specifically designated (b), or by a discretionary power of sale being given to the trustee (c), or by a direction to sell or divide the property after the death of the beneficiary for life (d). In the absence of such clear indication an intention that wasting property shall be converted is presumed (e). But the presumption is much weaker, if it exists at all, in the case of an absolute gift with an executory limitation over (f). The rule as to conversion does not apply in the case of a settlement by deed (g), nor to leasehold property situate abroad where a contrary rule of law prevails (h).

Where sums originally belonging to a testator's residuary estate bequeathed in trust for a beneficiary for life and remaindermen, and not recovered until some time after the expiration of twelve months from the testator's death, were paid away by mistake, and were afterwards restored to the estate, they were held to be divisible between the beneficiary for life and the remaindermen on the principle of ascertaining what was the value of the sums at the end of a year from the testator's death and allowing out of them to the beneficiary for life interest on the amount of that value (*Re Cleveland's (Duke) Estate, Hay v. A conveyance upon trust to make good breaches of trust committed by the disposer in respect of certain trust estates was held to be irrevocable, being a trust for particular persons, not for general creditors (*New, Prance and Garrard's Trustees v. SUB-SECT. 8. — Estate of Beneficiaries.

(i.) Nature of Estate.

74. The declaration or creation of an executed trust (p) and the equitable estate or interest created thereby are construed and take effect according to the same rules of interpretation as a legal assurance or limitation and the legal estate or interest created thereby (q), unless the language shows a clear intention on the part of the disposer that it should be construed differently (r). A trust is, however, construed so as to carry out the expressed or implied intention of the disposer (s), and therefore, under a trust of real property, a limitation of an equitable estate in fee or otherwise may be created by words which in law would be insufficient to create the intended estate (t).

In particular, the common law doctrine as to contingent remainders founded on feudal rules that if at the determination of a prior freehold estate there is no person who answers the description of a remainderman next entitled to take the contingent remainder fails (a), was never held to apply to equitable or trust estates; and it has always been held that, if at the determination of a prior equitable or trust estate of freehold there is no person capable of taking, a person afterwards coming into existence within the limits trustee (i). An equitable purchaser for value, however, who acquired his title without notice of a prior equitable title, may obtain priority by getting in the legal estate, even though when he gets it in he has notice of the prior equitable title (j), unless he gets in the legal estate from a trustee who commits a breach of trust in conveying it to him (k). Such a purchaser has similar precedence if, without having actually acquired the legal estate, he has the better title or right to call for it (l).

In the case of personal property.

79. On the other hand, in the case of personal property, a disposition of an equitable estate or interest of which notice is not given to the trustee is postponed to a subsequent disposition thereof for valuable consideration, whether by way of assignment or charge, of which prior notice is given to the trustee (m), unless the person entitled under the later disposition had when he acquired his title notice of the prior disposition (n). In case of the bankruptcy of the disposing beneficiary, the relative priority of the title of his trustee in bankruptcy and of a person claiming under a disposition from him for valuable consideration depends in like manner on whether notice to the trustee is first given of the bankruptcy or of the disposition (o). Moreover, the person claiming under a disposition of an equitable

80. Notice to one of several trustees is sufficient during his continuance as a trustee (q). Where, however, notice is not given to all, notice to any trustee is only effectual so long as he remains trustee, so that, when there is no longer a trustee to whom notice has been given, it becomes necessary, in order to secure protection or priority, to renew the notice to one or more of the succeeding trustees (r). If, however, notice is given to all the trustees for the time being, the priority acquired thereby is not lost by any subsequent changes in the trusteeship, so that it is not in that case necessary to renew the notice to succeeding trustees (s). The notice may be by parol (t), but for the sake of safety it should be in writing (a). It must be clear and distinct (b), and, if it states particulars, must do so correctly, so far

C. 369, per Lord HERSCHELL, L.C., at pp. 379, et seq.; see title CHOSSES IN ACTION, Vol. IV., pp. 383, 384. If the disposition is made to a trustee, his notice of it is sufficient; but if one of the trustees, being also a beneficiary, is himself the disposer, his notice of the disposition will not suffice without notice also to one or more of his co-trustees, since it is to his interest to conceal the fact of the disposition (Browne v. Savage, supra; Willes v. Greenhill (No. 1) (1860), 29 Beav. 376; Lloyd's Bank v. Pearson, [1901] 1 Ch. 865; Re Dallas, [1904] 2 Ch. 385, C. A., per BUCKLEY, J., at p. 400, and per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., at pp. 411, 412). A person taking a disposition of an equitable interest in trust property should therefore inquire of all the trustees whether they have notice of a prior disposition of the interest (Smith v. Smith, supra, per Lord LYNCHURST, C.B., at pp. 233, 234; Re Wyatt, White v. Ellis, supra, per STIRLING, J., at p. 187).

This principle does not, however, apply where there is only one trustee for the time being and he is himself the disposer; see note (q), supra. New trustees are not under any obligation to inquire of old trustees whether they have received notice of any dispositions of equitable interests in the trust property (*Phipps v. The decision in Clarke v. Wright (1861), 6 H. & N. 849, Ex. Ch., in favour of a former illegitimate child of the woman and the propriety of the exception in such a case, apart from circumstances which may bring it within the first exception (see the text, supra), are open to question (De Mestre v. West, supra; A.-G. v. Jacobs Smith, supra).

SECT. 2.

Express Trusts.

Valuable consideration in favour of third party.

Binding whether voluntary or for consideration.

Avoidance in certain circumstances.

Change of circumstances.

Rectification on account of error.

85. Where an incomplete trust is declared between a disposing party and another for valuable consideration in favour of a third person, performance of the trust can be enforced at the suit of the other party to the declaration, but not at the suit of the third person (e).

SUB-SECT. 10.—Revocation, Avoidance, and Rectification of Trusts.

86. Where a trust for a lawful object is duly executed, or, in other words, an express trust is completely constituted (f), it is generally binding and irrevocable whether it was constituted or declared for valuable consideration or voluntarily, unless a power of revocation is expressly reserved (g).

A disposition of property in trust stands, however, on the same footing as a direct transfer or gift of property in respect of its liability in certain circumstances to be set aside, if voluntary, on the bankruptcy of the disposer (h), or, whether voluntary or not, as a fraud upon his creditors or other persons having a prior equitable claim upon the property (i).

87. A trust created to provide for particular circumstances may become void if the circumstances cease to exist (k).

88. Where by mistake an instrument creating a trust of property does not express the intention of the disposer, it will be cancelled or rectified according as the true intention of the disposer requires (l).

• SECT. 3.—Constructive and Implied Trusts.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Constructive Trusts.

90. A constructive trust, in its strict sense (a), is a trust attached by law to property which is not expressly subject to a trust, but which a person holding other property in trust for some other person or object, or occupying in respect of other property a fiduciary position towards some other person or object, has acquired by means of his ownership of or dealings with such trust or fiduciary property (b). The person who holds property on a constructive trust occupies a fiduciary position in respect of it, and is sometimes called a constructive trustee or a trustee de son tort (c).

Definition

91. Where a lease is renewable by custom or contract (d), and a person holding it in whole or in part as a trustee or agent, or in a fiduciary capacity for another person or object, obtains a renewal of the lease, he holds the renewed lease in whole or in part in trust leaseholds.

MISTAKE, Vol. XXI., pp. 12, 19, 23, 28. The instrument may be reformed after the death of the disposer, if it is proved beyond all doubt that it did not express his intentions (Lister v. Hodgson (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 30, per Lord ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 32; Weir v. Van Tromp (1900), 16 T. L. R. 531).

(m) Lane v. Dedenham (1853), 11 Hare, 188, per Wood, V.-C., at p. 192. As to revocation of trusts for creditors, see pp. 38, 39, post. The revocation of a trust or use by a writing not being a will is chargeable with a stamp duty of 10s. (Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 1, Sched. I., Revocation); and see title REVENUE, Vol. XXIV., pp. 724 et seq.

(a) The term "constructive trust" is commonly used as synonymous with the term "implied trust" (as to which see pp. 58 et seq., post), and also includes resulting trusts (as to which see pp. 49 et seq., post). For the purposes of this section of this title the term is used as defined in the text.

(b) Espinasse v. Lowe (1764), 7 Bro. Parl. Cas. 345, 55; see p. 7, ante. As to constructive and resulting trusts, see, further, title EQUIT, Vol. XIII., pp. 155 et seq.

(c) The expression "constructive trustee" or "trustee de son tort" is more strictly applicable to a person who holds property which is subject to an express trust without having duly become trustee thereof or acquired a fiduciary position in respect thereof (Barnes v. Addy (1874), 9 Ch. App. 244, per Lord SELBORNE, L.C., at p. 251; Soar v. Ashwell, [1893] 2 Q. B. 390, C. A., per KAY, L.J., at p. 405; and see pp. 6, ante, 87 et seq., post).

(d) The principle does not apply when a person without fraud takes a new lease or acquires the reversion on a lease which he holds on trust or in a fiduciary capacity, where such lease is not renewable by contract or custom (Randall v. Russell (1817), 3 Mer. 190; Longton v. Wilsby (1897), 76 L. T. 770; Bevan v. Webb, [1905] 1 Ch. 620). Where a person partly interested in an old lease takes a new lease to himself on the surrender or at the expiration of the lease, he is not a constructive trustee of the new lease unless, in respect of the old lease, he occupied some special position by virtue of which he owed a duty towards the other persons interested, as, for instance, as tenant for life in respect of settled leaseholds, or as partner in respect of a partnership lease, or as mortgagee in respect of a mortgaged lease (Re Biss, Biss v. Biss, [1903] 2 Ch. 40, C. A., distinguishing Ex parte Grace (1799), 1 Bos. & P. 376, and considering Palmer v. Young (1884), 1 Vern. 276, more correctly reported, [1903] 2 Ch. 65, n., and Rawe v. Orchester (1773), Amb. 715, 719); see also Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick (1810), 17 Ves. 298; Hunter v. Allen, [1907] 1 I. R. 212; and note (c), p. 48, post.

for that person or object (e). If instead of renewing the lease he purchases the reversion from the person from whom renewal could have been claimed, he holds the reversion on the same trust as the lease (f).

92. Where an accretion of any kind comes to property held in trust or in a fiduciary capacity, the accretion cannot be retained by the holder of the property, but forms part of the capital of the trust property for the benefit of the person or object beneficially interested in it (g).

93. A person holding a fiduciary position in relation to property cannot deal with the property for his own benefit (h). Nor can he in dealing with a third person with respect to the property obtain

The fact that the lessor expressly refused to renew for the benefit of the cestui que trust makes no difference (Keech v. Sandford, supra; Fitzgibbon v. Scanlan, supra, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 269), and it is immaterial that the new lease contains additional property and is at an increased rent (Re Morgan, Pillgrem v. Pillgrem, supra; but see Acheson v. Fair (1843), 2 Con. & Law. 208). If the creator of the trust himself takes a renewed lease, he holds it for the trust (Re Lulham, Brinton v. Lulham, supra). As to the renewal of a lease of partnership premises, see note (d), p. 47, ante; title PARTNERSHIP, Vol. XXI., pp. 48, 82; as to renewal by a tenant for life, see pp. 61, 62, post; as to renewal by a mortgagee, see title MORTGAGE, Vol. XXI., p. 127.

But it is otherwise where he purchases the reversion from a person to whom the lessor has lawfully assigned it discharged from the legal liability to renew the lease (Randall v. Russell, supra; Bevan v. Webb, [1905] 1 Ch. 620). Where this is not the case he may have a lien on the trust estate for the purchase-money which he has paid (Isaac v. Wall, supra). On the same principle it was held that where two sisters entitled to a mortgage as tenants in common in equal shares purchased from the mortgagor the equity of redemption, and, though each paid half the purchase-money, took the conveyance of it to themselves as joint tenants, they were in equity entitled to the property in equal shares as tenants in common (Edwards v. Fashion (1712), Prec. Ch. 332).

The confirmation by Act of Parliament of the title of a tenant for life of an encroachment was held to enure also for the benefit of the remaindermen (Yem v. Edwards (1857), 1 De G. & J. 598, C. A.). Where, however, a person is a trustee of property only in respect of a specific sum charged thereon or payable thereout, and is absolute owner of the rest, he is beneficially entitled to the whole of any increment thereof or accretion thereto (Re Campbell, Campbell v. Campbell, [1893] 3 Ch. 468).

a personal advantage to himself by a secret agreement with that person (i). Similarly, where profits are made by a person by means of dealings with trust property or property in respect of which he stands in a fiduciary position, or by means of his occupying a fiduciary position, they form part of the capital or income of the property, as the case may be, and are held in trust for the person or object beneficially interested in such capital or income (k).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Resulting Trusts.(i.) In General.

94. A resulting trust is a constructive or implied trust arising by operation of law (l) in the following cases, namely:—(1) where an intention to put property into trust is sufficiently expressed or indicated, but the actual trust either is not declared in whole or in part or fails in whole or in part (m); (2) where property is purchased in the name or placed in the possession of a person ostensibly for his own use, but really in order to effect a particular purpose which fails (n); and (3) where property is purchased in the name or placed in the possession of a person without any intimation that he is to hold it in trust, but the retention of the beneficial interest by the purchaser or disposer is presumed to have been intended and is held to be equitable (o). In all these cases, except where the failure of a declared trust arises from the illegality of the object, and the trustee relies on the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis (p), the beneficial interest in the property, so far as not applicable to any sufficiently expressed or indicated beneficiary or object, results or reverts to the disposer or purchaser of the property or, in the case of his previous death, to his representatives (q).

Thompson*, [1896] 1 Ch. 71. But where the profit obtained, though it ultimately comes out of the trust estate, is in reality remuneration for services rendered under a proper and independent agreement, it does not form part of the trust property (Re Lewis, Lewis v. Lewis, [1910] W. N. 217). A partner who, in the course of negotiating for a lease to the partnership firm, receives a large sum of money from the lessors, is a trustee of it for the benefit of the firm (Fawcett v. Whitehouse, supra). As to the relation of promoters and directors of a company to the company, see pp. 59, 60, post; title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 221, 222, 226. A director who purchases property independently of the company and afterwards sells it to the company at a profit is not a trustee for the company of the profit (Burland v. Earle, [1902] A. C. 83, P. C.). As to the liability to account for secret profits where a trustee becomes bankrupt, see title BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY, Vol. II., p. 260.

Beneficial destination of the property not exhausted.

95. Where property is assured to a trustee upon trusts, and the trusts do not, either as declared by the instrument of assurance or in the event, legally exhaust the beneficial destination of the property, the remaining beneficial interest therein results to the settlor and forms part of his real or personal estate according to the nature of the property (r). This principle, however, does not apply (1) where a contrary intention is indicated in the instrument of assurance or is otherwise sufficiently proved (s); or (2) where the trust for which the property has been assured fails owing to its being for a purpose which is illegal in itself; and which has been partly carried out, in which case the court gives no assistance to the disposer in asserting his right under a resulting trust, on the principle that in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis (t). If, however,

Where, on a marriage, personal property of the wife is settled so as to give a life interest therein to the husband after her death so long as he remains a widower, he ceases on his remarriage to be entitled to the life interest and there is a resulting trust thereof for the wife's estate (Re Wyatt, Gowan v. Wyatt (1889), 60 L. T. 920). Where property is settled in contemplation of a marriage which is never in fact solemnised, there is a resulting trust of it in favour of the party who settled it (Thomas v. Brennan (1846), 15 L. J. (CH.) 420; Mitford v. Reynolds (1848), 16 Sim. 130; Easery v. Cowlard (1884), 26 Ch. D. 191); but where a father settles money and covenants to settle further property on his daughter on her marriage, and the trusts declared do not extend to the event (which happens) of her having no issue and surviving her husband, there is a resulting trust in favour of the daughter and not of the settlor (Doyle v. Crean, [1905] 1 I. R. 252; see Ward v. Dyas (1835), L. & G. temp. Sugd. 177).

(s) Cook v. Hutchinson, supra; Biddulph v. Williams (1875), 1 Ch. D. 203. The presumption of a resulting trust may be rebutted even by parol evidence (Cook v. Hutchinson, supra, per Lord LANGDALE, M.R., at p. 50).

This principle, however, does not apply to a trust for an object which, though not unlawful in itself, is incapable by law of taking under the trust (Russell v. Jackson (1852), 10 Hare, 204, 214).

nothing has been done to carry the illegal purpose into effect, the disposer is entitled to have the property reconveyed (u).

SECT. 8.
Constructive and Implied Trusts.

Rights of heir-at-law under devise of realty upon trust.

96. Where a testator by his will devises real property in trust and does not exhaustively indicate, in a manner which can legally take effect (x), the persons or objects to be benefited by it, or where there is a failure of the persons or objects indicated, there is a resulting trust of the remaining beneficial interest in the real property for the testator's heir-at-law (a), if there is no indication of a contrary intention on the part of the testator (b). The principle applies where the destination of the rents and profits of real property during a limited period either has not been indicated by the testator or fails to take effect (c).

If a testator devises real property upon trust for sale and does not exhaustively indicate the application of the proceeds of sale, the beneficial interest in these proceeds and in the funds which represent them, so far as the destination thereof is not indicated, results to the heir-at-law (d), even though the testator expressly directs that no part of the proceeds shall lapse to or result for the benefit of the heir-at-law (e), or directs that the proceeds shall form part of his personal estate (f). Where a testator directs a sum of money to be raised out of his real property, but does not indicate the purpose deemed in equity to be held on a resulting trust for the purchaser or transferor (h).

SECT. 8.
Constructive and Implied Trusts.

Joint transactions.

104. The principle of implying a resulting trust applies where several persons purchase property in the name of one (i). Where, however, two or more persons purchase property in their joint names or transfer property into their joint names, and contribute the purchase-money or property in equal shares, they hold the property as joint tenants with benefit of survivorship both at law and in equity, unless there is evidence of a contrary intention on their part at the time of the purchase or transfer, or unless there are circumstances from which such an intention can be inferred (k). If they contributed the purchase-money or property in unequal shares, there is a tenancy in common between them in equity (l), though even in this case the equitable tenancy in common may be rebutted by evidence or circumstances (m).

105. Where a father or other person in loco parentis purchases property in the name of a child or transfers property into the name of a child, the transaction does not create a resulting trust for the purchaser or transferor, but is an advancement or gift to a child (n).

unless there is evidence of a contrary intention at the time of the transaction (a), or the circumstances are such as to raise a presumption against the advancement or gift (p). The rule is the same where the purchase or transfer is made in the joint names of a child or a stranger (a), or in the name of an illegitimate child towards whom the father has placed himself in loco parentis (b). A mere moral obligation to provide for the other person is not, however, sufficient to rebut the resulting trust (c).

Addition to presumption of a gift or advancement by a mother is not so strong as in the case of a father, but it is in each case a question of evidence (Re De Visne (1863), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 17, C. A.; *Down v. Cas. 92, 98). Subsequent acts or expressions on the part of the parent will not convert the advancement or gift into a trust for himself (Murless v. Franklin, supra; Crabb v. Crabb (1834), 1 My. & K. 511, C. A., per Lord BROUGHAM, L.C., at p. 519; Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, supra). But subsequent acts or declarations of the child may establish a trust in favour of the parent (Pole v. Pole (1748), 1 Ves. Sen. 76; Sidmouth v. Sidmouth, supra; Jeans v. Cooke (1854), 24 Beav. 513, 521). As to where a father effects a policy of assurance on the life of his son, see Freme v. Brade (1858), 2 De G. & J. 582, C. A.; *Worthington v. 107. If a husband purchases property in the sole name of his wife or transfers property into her sole name, he is presumed to do so as an absolute advancement or gift to her (e); and a purchase or transfer of property in or into the joint names of himself and his wife, or of himself and his wife and a third person, is presumed to be for the benefit of his wife if she survives him, though if he survives her the property reverts to him (f). On the other hand, where a wife hands over to her husband property belonging to her for her separate use, without any intention of making a gift of it to him, he is a trustee of it for her (g). The above rules as between husband and wife do not apply where there is evidence of a contrary intention (h).

does not assist the purchaser or transferor to enforce his claim to the beneficial interest in it under a resulting trust or interfere with the possession of the nominee or transferee (n).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Trusts Implied from Other Relationships.

Contractual or other relationship.

110. Where under a contractual or other relationship subsisting between parties one of them holds or deals with the property of the other in a fiduciary capacity, he is regarded in equity as doing so on an implied trust from the other party, but subject in each case to the conditions which the relationship implies or involves (n).

If the trustee seeks the direction of a court of equity as to the application of the property, the court directs that it shall revert to the estate of the disposer (Phillips v. Probyn, [1899] 1 Ch. 811). The last principle does not apply where the object of a trust is lawful in itself but is incapable in law of taking under the disposition (*Russell v. SECT. 3.
Constructive and Implied Trusts.

112. An auctioneer holds on trust for the vendor deposit money paid to him in respect of a sale (g).

113. The deposit of money with a banker is ordinarily not a transaction which creates a fiduciary relation between the parties, but is simply a loan (r). Special circumstances may, however, create an implied trust in the case of a banker or other person with whom the money or property of another is deposited (s).

Auctioneer.
Banker or other depositor.
Broker or consignee.

114. A broker or consignee, though not ordinarily in the position of a trustee (t), may receive property under conditions which create an implied trust of it for the owner (a).

115. A company or corporation is in a certain sense a trustee of its corporate property for its nominal members (b). It is not, however, ordinarily affected with trusts or equitable interests upon or subject to which its nominal members hold their shares or interests therein (c); and an insurance company is not a trustee of money due under its policies (d).

Company or corporation.

On the other hand, an implied trust for the company and its members, involving inability to make personal profit out of transactions affecting the company (e), is attached by law to the position of a promoter of a company (f) or a director of a Lowten* (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 226, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at pp. 244 et seq.); and the ordinary rights and duties as between a trustee and his cestui que trust do not subsist between a company or corporation and its members (Salomon v. Salomon & Co., Salomon & Co. v. Salomon, [1897] A. C. 22, per Lord HERSCHELL, at pp. 43, 44). The money of a company or corporation is a trust fund because it is applicable only to its special purposes; but the company or corporation is the cestui que trust, and its individual members do not hold that position (Russell v. Wakefield Waterworks Co. (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 474, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 479). A company is not trustee of dividends declared; see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., p. 276.

company (g). Although directors stand in a fiduciary position to the company, they do not, however, stand in such a position to a stranger with whom the company has dealings (h). Again, if a breach of trust is committed by a company acting through its board of directors, no action in respect thereof can be maintained against the directors personally (i).

Executor.

116. In a loose sense a legal personal representative is a trustee for the creditors and beneficiaries claiming under the deceased, since he holds the real and personal estate of the deceased for their benefit and not for his own (k); and he is guilty of a breach of trust if he misapplies it (l). An executor is not, however, as such, strictly a trustee for a legatee, whether the legatee is an adult (m) or an infant (n), nor for the next of kin of the testator (o), notwithstanding the terms of the Executors Act, 1830 (p). He does not become a trustee by signing a residuary account (q), or by merely assenting to an absolute legacy (a). If, however, property is bequeathed to him on trust, he becomes a trustee of it (b) when he has either proved the will (c) and has paid all the debts (d), or, in the case of a legacy, has assented to it (e) or has severed it from the rest of the estate (f), or has executed a declaration of trust (g). their benefit (m). If he unduly cuts down timber or works mines, or otherwise commits waste on the property, he is liable to make good for the benefit of the remaindermen the loss which the property has sustained thereby (a). If he receives a bonus from a railway company in consideration of not opposing their Bill in Parliament, he holds it on a similar trust (b).

A tenant for life of real estate, who pays off a charge thereon without taking an assignment of it to himself, is presumed to have intended to constitute himself a creditor against the estate for the sum so paid. On the other hand, if a tenant in tail or absolute owner pays off a charge on the estate, he is presumed to have intended to exonerate the estate therefrom and is not deemed a creditor in respect thereof. In each case the presumption may be rebutted (c).

A tenant for life under a settlement within the meaning of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (d), and the amending Acts (e) is, in relation to the exercise by him of any power under those Acts, deemed to be in the position, and to have the duties and liabilities, of a trustee for all parties entitled under the settlement (f).

During the continuance of a mortgage there is no actual and present relationship of trustee and cestui que trust between mortgagor and mortgagee (g), and a mortgagor's equity of redemption differs materially in many respects from a trust estate (h). The relation, however, is or may become for some purposes a trust relation (i). A mortgagor may create a mortgage in such a form as to make himself trustee of property for the purposes of the security (k); but in that case the trust remains dormant until the mortgagee calls it into operation (l). Under the ordinary form of mortgage a mortgagee is in some senses and in some circumstances a trustee for the mortgagor and for subsequent incumbrancers (n). A mortgagee who has entered into possession of the mortgaged property is trustee of the rents and profits thereof for himself and subsequent incumbrancers and for the mortgagor (n). If he has not interfered with the property, he is not strictly a trustee till the mortgage money is tendered to him (o). A mortgagee who sells the property is, however, constructive trustee of the surplus proceeds of sale, if any, after payment of the money owing to him on his security (p); and a mortgagee of the legal estate, who has been paid off, holds that legal estate, until he reconveys it, in trust for the mortgagor (q).

SECT. 1.—Qualification.

SECT. 1.

Qualification.Who may be trustees.

124. Any person who is capable in law of holding property in his own right may hold the office of trustee in respect of such property (f). A corporation, whether aggregate or sole, may be a trustee (g), but cannot without a licence in mortmain hold real property in trust which it could not without such licence hold for its own benefit (h). The office may be held by a woman, whether unmarried (i) or married (k), or by an infant (l), or an alien (m).

125. A person may hold a legal estate in property as trustee of that estate for himself and other beneficiaries (n). He may not, however, at the same time be sole trustee and sole cestui que trust of commensurate legal and equitable estates in property (o), though SECT. 2.—Commencement of Office.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Modes of Commencement.

Trustees, how constituted.

126. A person is legally constituted a trustee who (1) is originally designated as such by the instrument creating the trust (q), or is duly appointed as such under a power for the purpose contained in that instrument (r), or under a statutory power for the purpose (s), or by a court of competent jurisdiction (t), or, in the case of a charitable trust, by the Charity Commissioners or under a legally established scheme (a); and (2) accepts the trust either expressly or by acting in the execution of it (b). A person who is not legally constituted trustee becomes in equity a constructive trustee (c) (1) where trust property becomes in law, for want of a legally constituted trustee, vested in him (d); or (2) where he has acquired trust property in circumstances which, in equity, are deemed to require him to hold it upon the trust to which it was subject when he acquired it (e); or (3) where he intermeddles with and acts as trustee in relation to trust property, in which case he is also called a trustee de son tort (f).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Original Trustees.

Appointment
by creator of trust.

127. An original trustee is generally appointed by the creator of the trust either expressly (g) or by language which implies that he is to fill that character (h).

Equitable estates in common will merge in a joint legal estate acquired by the tenants in common (Re Selous, Thomson v. Selous, [1901] 1 Ch. 921). 128. Trusts do not fail by a failure of trustees (i). Where no trustee is effectually appointed by the creator of the trust (k), or all the trustees appointed by him die or refuse to accept the trust (l) before the trust takes effect, the person in whom the trust property is vested by reason of such failure of appointment, death, or refusal is deemed in equity to be the trustee of the property for the purposes of the trust (m). In such event, however, if there is any procedure for the appointment of new trustees which is applicable to the case, it can be resorted to for the appointment of an original trustee (n), and if such procedure is not applicable or is not resorted to, a court of equity will supply an original trustee (o).

133. An appointment of a new trustee under a power for that purpose contained in the trust disposition must be in accordance in all material respects with the terms of the power (f). It should in strictness be made by direct operative words (g); but it may be effected by a recital or statement in a deed to which the appointor is a party, to the effect that he has appointed a certain person as a new trustee (h) or that such person is the present trustee (i). Where several persons have a power of appointing a new trustee they may, in the absence of any direction to the contrary, exercise the power by separate instruments (k).

without having ever acted therein (b), unless a contrary intention is indicated by the language of the instrument which contains the power (c).

A power to appoint a trustee in the place of one who desires to be discharged from or declines or refuses to act in the trust authorises an appointment in the place of one who has never acted in and who disclaims the trust (d), or of one who under the Trustee Act, 1898 (e), pays the trust fund into court (f).

Bankruptcy and incapacity.

138. An appointment of a new trustee in the place of one who becomes bankrupt is authorised by a power to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who becomes unfit to act (g), but not by a power to appoint in the place of one who is incapable of acting (h). A power in the latter form refers exclusively to personal incapacity (i), and therefore authorises an appointment in the place of a lunatic trustee (k). Absence abroad does not constitute unfitness or incapacity on the part of a trustee (l); and a direction that a trustee shall cease to fill the post on departing from the United Kingdom from any cause and in any circumstances does not apply to a mere temporary absence (m). If, however, the power extends to appointing a new trustee in the place of one going to reside abroad or being abroad, and that event happens, the power should be exercised, and a cestui que trust may call upon the donee of the power to exercise it (n).

Beneficiaries.

140. Where a power of appointing new trustees is conferred on a person by name who is beneficially interested in the trust property he can exercise it although he has incumbered or alienated his beneficial interest (q).

A power to named beneficiaries to appoint new trustees with the consent or concurrence of the surviving or continuing trustees or trustee for the time being is exercisable by them at their sole discretion when there is no trustee living or continuing to act (r).

141. Where the power to appoint is vested in the trustees who are for the time being surviving, even though it is given to the original trustees by name, it is annexed to their office (s). It can, therefore, be exercised by a single continuing trustee during the life of another of the original trustees who has disclaimed the trust (t).

Surviving
trustees.

Where an express power of appointment is vested in the surviving or continuing trustees it cannot be exercised by a trustee who declines to act (u), or who is retiring from the trust (v), but is exercisable independently of him by the other trustees who are actually continuing in the trust (a). Where, however, the power is vested in the surviving or continuing or other trustee or trustees it is exercisable by a retiring trustee (b).

Retiring
trustee.

142. Where an express power of appointment is vested in the acting trustees or trustee for the time being or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, the representatives of the last surviving trustee, having the trust property vested in them, and being capable in law of executing the trust, are acting trustees who can exercise the power (c). named person, his executors or administrators or assigns, it is validly exercised after his death by his acting executors without the concurrence of another who has renounced probate of his will (d).

As regards trusts which have come into operation since 1881, a power of appointment capable of being exercised by a sole or last surviving or continuing trustee may, unless the instrument creating the trust contains a direction to the contrary, be exercised by the personal representatives of such trustee (e).

Trustee

of lunatics.

144. Where the person in whom a power of appointing new trustees is vested or whose consent to such an appointment is required is a lunatic or of unsound mind, the committee or quasi-committee of his estate may, under an order of a judge in lunacy, in the name and on behalf of such person exercise a power of appointment of new trustees vested in him or give any consent required from him to the exercise of such a power (g). The person or persons who after and in consequence of such exercise of the power are the trustee or trustees have the same rights and powers as he or they would have had if the order had been made by the High Court (h). In any such case, where it seems to be for the benefit of the lunatic or person of unsound mind, the judge may make any order respecting the property subject to the trust which might have been made by the High Court on the appointment, under the Trustee Act, 1893 (i), of a new trustee or new trustees (j).

(c) This means the persons nominated by the instrument in terms which are applicable to the exercise of the statutory power (Ogil v. Langdon (1884), 28 Ch. D. 1, C. A.). It includes persons who are given a general power to appoint new trustees or a new trustee for the settlement (Re Walker and Hughes' Contract (1883), 24 Ch. D. 698). But persons empowered by the instrument to appoint a new trustee in, among other events, the event of a trustee becoming incapable, but not in the event of his becoming unfit to act, are not persons nominated to appoint a new trustee in the place of one who becomes unfit to act (Re Wheeler and De Rochoy, [1896] 1 Ch. 315).

(e) This applies where the persons entitled to appoint cannot agree in appointing (Re Sheppard's Settlement Trusts, [1888] W. N. 234).

(f) A trustee can insist on exercising the power of appointment against the wishes of the majority of the cestuis que trust (Re Higginbottom, [1892] 3 Ch. 132). The power conferred on a continuing trustee extends to a refusing or retiring trustee if willing to exercise it (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 10 (4)). His concurrence in the appointment of new trustees is not requisite in the absence of evidence that he is able and willing to concur therein (Re Coates to Parsons (1886), 34 Ch. D. 370).

(g) Personal representatives mean the acting executors or administrators (Re Parker's Trusts, [1894] 1 Ch. 707, per KEREWICH, J., at p. 721; Conveyancing Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 8 (4); and see p. 72, ante). They are not bound to exercise the power conferred upon them (Re Knight's Sarah's Will (1884), 26 Ch. D. 82, C. A., per PEARSON, J., at p. 89).

(h) A person who has never acted in the trust is not reckoned as a trustee; and therefore, where all the trustees named in a will predecease the testator, the executors of the last survivor of them cannot appoint new trustees (Nicholson v. Field, [1893] 2 Ch. 511). But the executors of a sole trustee who dies after having acted can exercise the power (Re Shafto's Trusts (1885), 29 Ch. D. 247). And in cases in which stat. (1860) 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145 (commonly called Lord Cranworth's Act), s. 27, is still applicable (see note (q), p. 73, ante), and is expressly or impliedly incorporated in the trust instrument, the only proving and acting executor of a last surviving trustee can exercise the power though other executors were appointed and have not renounced (Re Boucherott, Barnes v. Erskine, [1908] 1 Ch. 180).

(i) Re Parker's Trusts, supra. A sole surviving trustee cannot appoint new trustees by will; and if by his will he appoints general executors and special executors of the trust, the power of appointing new trustees is vested in the general executors (ibid.; compare Conveyancing Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 8).

(k) A person cannot, therefore, under this power appoint himself to be a trustee (Re Noden, Noden v. Barnes, [1894] 2 Ch. 297, Re Sampson, Sampson v. Sampson, [1906] 1 Ch. 435).

SECT. 2.

Number of trustees.

151. Where a new trustee is appointed for the whole or any part of the trust property, the number of trustees may be increased (n). It is not obligatory to appoint more than one new trustee where only one trustee was originally appointed, or to fill up the original number of trustees where more than two trustees were originally appointed; but, except where only one trustee was originally appointed, a trustee is not discharged from his trust by the appointment of a new trustee or new trustees under the provisions of the statute, unless there will be at least two trustees to perform the trust (o).

152. Where a new trustee is appointed for the whole of any part of the trust property a separate set of trustees may be appointed for any part of the trust property held on trusts distinct from those relating to any other part or parts thereof, notwithstanding the non-appointment of any new trustees or trustee for other parts of the trust property, and any existing trustee may be appointed or remain one of the separate set of trustees, or, if only one trustee was originally appointed, one separate trustee may be so appointed for the part so held on distinct trusts (p).

of trustees.

153. Any assurance or thing requisite for vesting the trust property, or any part thereof, jointly in the persons who are the trustees, must be executed or done (q).

Assurances.

(m) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 10 (1). The court does not generally appoint a new trustee where there is a person able and willing to exercise the statutory power of appointment; see note (b), p. 76, post. But where the right person to exercise it is a lunatic trustee the appointment can be made in lunacy or by the continuing trustees (Re Blake (a Person of Unsound Mind), [1887] W. N. 173, C. A.; see p. 72, ante). A new trustee cannot be appointed under the statutory power in place of an infant appointed a trustee by the instrument creating the trust (Re Tallaire, [1885] W. N. 191). A new trustee cannot be appointed under the statutory power when there is no vacancy to be filled up (Re Gregson's Trusts (1886), 34 Ch. D. 209, per NORTH, J., at p. 210). As to the power of the court to make the appointment, see ibid.; and p. 76, post.

(p) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 10 (2) (b). Separate sets of trustees may be appointed by the court for distinct trusts notwithstanding that in a certain event the trusts may coalesce (Re Hetherington's Trusts (1886), 34 Ch. D. 211). Under the earlier enactment (Conveyancing Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 39), s. 5), which authorised the appointment of a separate set of trustees on an appointment of new trustees, there was a conflict of authority whether the appointment could be made without the authority of the court except on an appointment of new trustees for the whole of the trust property (Re Paine's Trusts (1885), 28 Ch. D. 725; Savile v. Couper (1887), 36 Ch. D. 520; Re Moss's Trusts (1888), 37 Ch. D. 513; Re Nesbitt's Trusts (1887), 19 L. R. Ir. 509, C. A.), but the doubt has been set at rest by the language of the present enactment (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 10 (2)). As to the appointment of a separate set of trustees by the court, see p. 79, post.

154. Every new trustee appointed under the above provisions, as well before as after all the trust property has become by law or by assurance or otherwise vested in him, has the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and may in all respects act as if he had been originally appointed a trustee by the instrument, if any, creating the trust (r).

155. Appointments of new trustees of some charities and charitable and other objects may be made under the Trustee Appointment Acts, 1850—1890 (s).

(iv.) Appointment by the Court.

(a) In General.

Appointment
by court.

156. By statute (t) the High Court and, within their respective jurisdictions, a palatine court or a county court (u), may, whenever it is expedient to appoint a new trustee or new trustees (a), and it is found inexpedient, difficult, or impracticable to do so without the assistance of the court (b), make an order for the appointment of a new trustee or new trustees either in substitution for or in addition to any existing trustee (c).

(a) The court will not appoint a new trustee where it is not expedient to do so (Re Sheppard's Trusts (1862), 4 De G. F. & J. 423, C. A., per TURNER, L.J., at p. 425).

(b) Where a sole or continuing trustee is desirous of exercising his statutory power of appointment, an application to the court, though made by a majority of the beneficiaries, and though the trustee has no beneficial interest under the trust, will be refused (Re Higginbottom, [1892] 3 Ch. 132), unless it be for the appointment of the Public Trustee (Re Kensit, [1908] W. N. 235); and generally the court will not appoint a new trustee, where the appointment can be made under a power in the instrument of trust or under the statutory power (Re Souby's Trusts (1873), 21 W. R. 256; Re Gibbons' (John) Trusts (1882), 45 L. T. 756; Re Sutton (a Lunatic), [1885] W. N. 122, C. A.; but see Re Jackson's Trusts (1868), 16 W. R. 572; Re Shafto's Trusts (1885), 29 Ch. D. 247). As to the effect of proceedings for the administration of the trust on the exercise of a power of appointing new trustees under the instrument of trust or of the statutory power, see p. 69, ante.

(c) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 25 (1). A new trustee may be appointed under the Act notwithstanding that the trustees have no trust property vested in them (Re Boyce (1864), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 205, per Lord WESTBURY, L.C., at pp. 208, 209). In some earlier cases it was held that the court could reappoint as new trustees persons who were already trustees (Re Stokes' Trusts (1872), L. R. 13 Eq. 333; Re Dalgleish's Settlement (1876), 4 Ch. D. 143, C. A.; Re Pearson (a Lunatic) (1877), 5 Ch. D. 982, C. A.; Re Tatham's Trusts, [1877] W. N. 259; Re Harford's Trusts (1879), 13 Ch. D. 135; Re Crowe's Trusts (No. 2) (1880), 14 Ch. D. 610), but this has been negatived in other and later cases (Re Driver's

157. The court, in appointing new trustees, does not confine itself to the original number (d), nor, on the other hand, insist on filling up the original number (e), but does not appoint a sole trustee where originally there were more than one (f). If there are two or more continuing trustees, the court in some cases authorises the continuing trustees to carry on the trust without appointing a new trustee to act with them (g).

158. The High Court may appoint a new trustee where the trust property is vested in or stands in the name of a lunatic or person of unsound mind (h). Where a testator dies a lunatic and all the trustees named in his will have predeceased him, the court may appoint new trustees of his will (i).

All the powers and provisions of the Act with reference to the appointment of new trustees apply to and include trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), and the amending Acts, whether appointed by the court or by the settlement or under provisions contained in the settlement (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 47). As to the appointment by the court of a new trustee of a policy of assurance effected by a man on his life in favour of his wife and children under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 11, see title HUSBAND AND WIFE, Vol. XVI., pp. 401, 402. The court will never vest an infant's trust fund in a sole trustee (Re Dickinson's Trusts, supra); but a sole new trustee has been appointed where there was but one trustee originally and the trust would shortly come to an end (Re Reynault (a Lunatic) (1852), 16 Jur. 233). It appears that, as far as jurisdiction is concerned, the court may now appoint two trustees, or even a sole trustee, notwithstanding a direction in the trust instrument that the number should never be reduced below three (Re Leslie's Hassop Estates, [1911] 1 Ch. 611).

Under the earlier statutes the court would not generally sanction in this way a reduced number of trustees in the case of a continuing trust (Re Lamb's Trusts (1884), 28 Ch. D. 77; Re Gardiner's Trusts (1886), 33 Ch. Applications for the appointment are made in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as applications for the appointment of a new trustee by the High Court in other cases; see p. 78, post.

Costs.

159. An order for the appointment of a new trustee may be made on the application of any person beneficially interested under the trust, whether under disability or not, or of any person duly appointed trustee thereof (k). Where all the parties interested do not join in the application, it is usual to serve the application upon the other persons who are interested in the trust either as trustees or beneficiaries (l).

The court may order the costs and expenses of and incident to an application for an order appointing a new trustee to be paid or raised out of the real or personal property in respect whereof the order is made, or out of the income thereof, or to be borne and paid in such manner and by such persons as to the court may seem, just (m).

Rev., Vol. VIII., Lunatic, England, pp. 3, 9). The application may be made by a person who has a contingent interest in the trust property (Re Sheppard's Trusts (1862), 4 De G. F. & J. 423, C. A.). Married women can apply for the appointment of new trustees without the concurrence of their husbands (Re Outwin's (G.) Trusts (1883), 48 L. T. 410). The president and secretary of the Wesleyan Conference have been held capable of applying for the appointment of new trustees of a Wesleyan chapel (Re Harden Wesleyan Chapel (1853), 1 W. R. 212). The application need not be served on a trustee who has absconded (Re Harrison's Trusts (1852), 22 L. J. (CH.) 69; Re Nicholson's Trusts, [1884] W. N. 76; Hyde v. Bembow, [1884] W. In the High Court an application under the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), must be entitled in the matter of the Act (Gough v. Bage (1871), 25 L. T. 738), and must be made in the Chancery Division (R. S. C., Ord. 54B, r. 1), and ordinarily by summons (R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 13A); but in a complicated case it may be made by petition (R. S. C., Ord. 54B, r. 2; Re Morris's Settlement Trusts (1889), 60 L. T. 96). It must not be made by action (Thomas v. Walker (1854), 18 Beav. 521).

160. Every trustee appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction has, as well before as after the trust property becomes, by law or by assurance or otherwise, vested in him, the same powers, authorities and discretions, and may in all respects act, as if he had been originally appointed a trustee by the instrument, if any, creating the trust (n).

The order and any consequential vesting order or conveyance (o) does not operate as a discharge to any former or continuing trustee further or otherwise than an appointment of new trustees under a power for that purpose contained in an instrument of trust would have operated (p).

(b) Cases in which Appointment will be Made.

161. Where the instrument creating the trust contains no power to appoint new trustees, and no trustee named therein is alive when the instrument comes into operation, an application to the court to appoint new trustees is necessary, since there is no one who is enabled under the Trustee Act, 1893 (q), to make the appointment (r). No trustees.

162. Where one of the original trustees is an infant, and inconvenience to the trust estate is caused thereby, the court appoints a new trustee in his place (s). Infant trustee.

163. A new trustee can be appointed in the place of a trustee who is physically incapable (t), or is a lunatic or of unsound mind (a). The court may make any order for the appointment of a new trustee in substitution for a trustee who is convicted of felony or is a bankrupt (b); but the statutory provision does not authorise the appointment of a person to be executor or administrator (c). Trustee incapable or lunatic.

164. The court, when it is expedient to do so, allows trustees to retire from a part of the trust and appoints new trustees of that part, without appointing a new trustee of the residue (d). As to part of trust.

165. The court may appoint an additional new trustee when there is no vacancy in the number of trustees (e).

166. Where it is sought to appoint a new trustee in the place of one who is within the jurisdiction and desires to continue to act, the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1893 (f), do not apply, and an action must be brought for the removal of the trustee and the appointment of another person in his place (g).

167. Where a company in which property is vested becomes automatically dissolved (h), a person may be appointed under the Trustee Act, 1893 (i), to be a trustee of the property in the place of the dissolved company; and an order may be made vesting the property in him (k).

(c) Who will be Appointed.

Principles on which appointment
is made.

168. In all cases of appointment by the court of a new trustee the court has regard to the wishes of the creator of the trust if expressed in or to be inferred from the instrument creating the trust (l) and to the question whether the appointment will preclude or impede the execution of the trust (m), and will not appoint a trustee with a view to the interests of some of the cestuis que trust in opposition to those of others (n).

Beneficiary.

169. A beneficiary or the husband of a beneficiary under the trust will not be appointed a trustee by the court (o), except where a suitable independent person cannot be found to undertake the Grant, supra*); but where the additional trustee was applied for by one beneficiary and opposed by another, the costs were ordered to be paid by the applicant (Re Brackenbury's Trusts, supra).

Such person, if the personal representative, has an absolute right to decline to accept the position and duties of trustee (o), and is liable at any time to be deprived of the office and powers by the appointment of new trustees (p), after which he will not remain a trustee, unless he is thereby appointed a new trustee (q). Subject to any direction to the contrary in the instrument creating the trust, the legal personal representatives or representative of a sole trustee, or of a last surviving or continuing trustee, may, until the appointment of new trustees, exercise or perform any power or trust given to or capable of being exercised by the sole or last surviving or continuing trustee (a).

Implied

177. A person impliedly accepts the office of trustee if he personally interferes with the trust property (i), or otherwise acts in the trust (k), or allows proceedings in reference to the trust property to be instituted (l), or dealings with the trust property to be carried on (m) in his name. A person who is named an executor and trustee in a will is deemed, if he proves the will, to accept the trusts of the will both as to personal property (n) and as to real property (o).

178. Acceptance of a trust is not implied from the trustee named in a deed merely taking charge of the deed temporarily for safe keeping (p), or from acts in connexion with the trust subsequent to his actual disclaimer or refusal thereof (q).

When

179. A person who is appointed a trustee may, before he has accepted the office or in any way acted therein (a), disclaim the office or refuse to serve (b). He cannot, however, disclaim the

Where a person did nothing to accept the trusts of a settlement except signing, many years afterwards, a memorandum indorsed upon it which related only to part of the settled property, he was only held liable as a trustee in respect of that part of the property (*Maley v. - Form of

- After lapse of time. Where a testator has appointed a person an executor and also a trustee, the fact of his renouncing probate and not acting as trustee is strong evidence that he has refused the trust (k), and is conclusive evidence of such refusal if the duties of executor are by the will inseparable from the duties of the trust (l).

The deed operates as a disclaimer of the trust property as well as of the trust; and a release of the trust property by a disclaiming trustee to his co-trustees is improper, as purporting to accept and deal with the property (Crewe v. Dicken (1798), 4 Ves. 97; Urch v. Walker (1838), 3 My. & Cr. 702; and see p. 83, ante); but it is not fatal to the disclaimer if the intention to disclaim is otherwise clear (*Nicolson v. is good if the trustee who executes it has never in the meantime acted or consented to act in the trust (m). Where, however, a trustee does not, until after the lapse of many years, by deed disclaim the trust or expressly decline to act therein, the fact of his not having executed the instrument of trust is not sufficient to prove his non-acceptance of the trust, and additional strong evidence is necessary to prove that he has not accepted it and that the trust property is not vested in him (n).

SMO. 2.
Commencement of Office.

181. A disclaimer or refusal to act in the trust takes effect ab initio and vests the trust property, as from the date when the trust disposition came into operation, exclusively in the trustees who consent to act (o). If all the trustees disclaim, the property reverts in the disposer, or, if he is dead, in his legal representative, who becomes, by operation of law, the trustee thereof for the purposes of the trust (p).

Effect on trust
property.

182. The disclaimer of the trustee, or of all the trustees nominated by the disposer, does not avoid the trust (q); but a new trustee will be appointed by a court of equity to execute it (r).

Trust not affected.

183. A trustee who disclaims is entitled to his expenses of disclaiming out of the trust fund (s), and to his costs of any proceedings to which he is made a party on the footing of being a trustee (t), except so far as he incurs or occasions costs beyond those actually incidental to making good his disclaimer (a).

Where, on probate of a will being obtained, power was reserved to a person named therein as one of the executors and trustees to come in and prove, the fact that he never did so and never acted in the trusts of the will was held, after a lapse of thirty years, not to be sufficient evidence, in the absence of an actual disclaimer, that he had not accepted the trusts (Re Needham (1844), 1 Jo. & Lat. 34, per SUGDEN, L.C., at p. 36).

Public
Trustee.

185. Subject to the Public Trustee Act, 1906 (e), and to the rules thereunder for the time being in force (f), the Public Trustee (g), if he consents to act as such (h) with respect to any trust created by any trust instrument or arising upon an intestacy, except the trusts of an instrument made solely by way of security for money, and whether or not the number of trustees has been reduced below the original number (i), may be appointed to be custodian trustee (k), either (1) by an order of a court of competent jurisdiction made on the application of a person entitled to apply for the appointment of a new trustee; or (2) by the testator, settlor, or other creator of a trust; or (3) by the person having power to appoint new trustees (l).

Companies and societies.

186. Any incorporated banking or insurance or guarantee or trust company, or other body corporate which is for the time being empowered to undertake trusts, may act as custodian trustee in like manner as the Public Trustee (m), so long as it does not state or hold out that any liability attaches to the Public Trustee or to the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom in respect of any act or omission on its part when so acting (n).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Bare Trustees.

Definition.

187. A person who holds trust property in trust for the absolute benefit and at the absolute disposal of other persons who are of full age and sui juris in respect of it, and who has himself no present beneficial interest in it, and no duties to perform in respect of it except to convey or transfer it to persons entitled to hold it, is a bare trustee, and is bound to convey or transfer the property accordingly when required to do so (o).

(1885), 29 Ch. D. 693; Re Cunningham and Frayling, [1891] 2 Ch. 567, per STIRLING, J., at pp. 571, 572. A bare trustee may originally have had duties in respect of the property which have since ceased (Christie v. Ovington (1875), 1 Ch. D. 279, per HALL, V.-C., at p. 281), or which have been superseded by a request from the persons entitled to the property to convey it to them (Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority (1878), 9 Ch. D. 582, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 585). A person who has himself an existing beneficial interest of any kind in the trust property is in no circumstances a bare trustee of it (Lysaght v. Edwards (1876), 2 Ch. D. 499, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 506). But trustees for sale, after selling the property under an order of court to a purchaser who has paid the purchase-money into court, are bare trustees of it, notwithstanding that they have a beneficial interest in the proceeds of sale, since their beneficial interest in the property itself has ceased, and they have no duty to perform in respect of it except to convey it to the purchaser (Re Docwra, Docwra v. Faith (1885), 29 Ch. D. 693). Where a passive trust was created to preserve contingent remainders, or to bar dower, or to keep alive an incumbrance or for some other purpose, the trustee might never have any function to perform in respect of the property (1 Hayes' Conveyancing, pp. 103—109). Where a person made an imperfect disposition of real property in trust by omitting the word "heirs" in the assurance of it to the trusts, his heir-at-law was held to be trustee of it (Dilrow v. Bone (1862), 3 Giff. 538). As to purchasers for value without notice, see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 76, 77, 81, 160.

reason of the trustees named in the will disclaiming the trust (c), the legal representative can execute a trust which imposes no other duty than simply to clothe the equitable ownership with the legal estate (d). Where, however, the trust is in the form of a power of leasing or of some other trust or power requiring the exercise of judgment and discretion, he cannot, though he holds the property subject to the trust, execute the trust or exercise the power, even though it may have been obligatory on the trustees named in the will to execute it (e).

Where owing to no person having been originally effectively appointed a trustee (f), or to the trustees having all died before the instrument creating the trust came into operation (g), or to their all disclaiming the trust (h), the trust property becomes in law vested in a person who is a stranger to the trust, he is in equity a constructive trustee of the property and holds it upon the trust to which it is subject (i).

A person buying real estate with notice of the rights of another therein is a trustee for him in respect thereof (Loke Yew v. Port Swettenham Rubber Co., Ltd., [1913] A. C. 494, P. C.). As to what is constructive notice, see Cookson v. Les (1853), 23 L. J. (CH.) 473, C. A. A person is held to have constructive notice of the trust if he abstains from making proper inquiries which would have led to his discovering its existence (Justice v. Wynne (1860), 12 I. Ch. R. 289, C. A., per BALL, J., at pp. 310,

194. In order to constitute a person who takes trust property or trust money for his own purposes a constructive trustee of it he must have notice that it is being misapplied by being transferred to him, or, in other words, he must be party to a fraud or breach of trust on the part of the actual trustee (l).

(b) Acquisition without Notice of Trust.

195. A person who, without notice of the trust, acquires property or an interest in property which is in fact subject to a subsisting trust, takes the property as a trustee and subject to the performance of the trust, if he acquires gratuitously either the legal estate (m) or an equitable interest in the property (n); or if he acquires for valuable consideration an equitable interest in the property without the right to call for the legal estate (o); in the latter case, however, he can protect himself from the trust by afterwards getting in the legal estate from a person who commits no breach of trust in parting with it to him (p), although he cannot do so by obtaining the legal estate from a person who is not justified in equity in transferring it to him (a). On the other hand, he takes the property discharged from the trust if he acquires the legal estate in the property for valuable consideration (b), or acquires an equitable interest in it for valuable consideration, and at the same time acquires a paramount right to call for the legal estate (c).

(c) Receipt of Trust Money.

196. A banker, broker, solicitor, or other stranger to the trust, receiving money from a trustee which he knows to be part of the trust property, does not become a constructive trustee thereof (d), unless he knows that the money is being applied in a manner inconsistent with the trust, or, in other words, unless he is a party either to a fraud or to a breach of trust on the part of the trustee (e). In so far as such money remains in the disposition of the trustee the cestuis que trust may follow it and claim it as against the trustee (f).

(1742), 2 Atk. 242; McQueen v. Farquhar (1805), 11 Ves. 467, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at p. 478). The only exception to the rule which protects a purchaser with notice who takes from a purchaser without notice is that which prevents a trustee from buying back trust property which he has sold, or a person who has acquired property by fraud from saying that he sold it to a bona fide purchaser without notice and has repurchased it from him (Barrow's Case (1880), 14 Ch. Hallett*, supra). But, as between two cestuis que trust whose money a trustee has so paid into his private account, the rule in Devaynes v. Noble Clayton's Case, supra, applies, and the sum first paid in will be held to have been first drawn out (*Re Hallett's Estate, Knatchbull v. (iv.) By Intermeddling with the Trust.

Commencement of Office.

Trustee de son tort.

197. A person who, not being a trustee (g) and not having authority from a trustee, takes upon himself to intermeddle with trust matters or to do acts characteristic of the office of trustee, makes himself a trustee de son tort—a trustee of his own wrong, or, as it is also termed, a constructive trustee (h). The responsibility which attaches to a trustee may extend in equity to a person who is not properly a trustee, if he either makes himself a trustee de son tort or actually participates in any fraudulent conduct of a trustee to the injury of the cestui que trust (i).

A person who is employed as solicitor or agent for trust property may become a constructive trustee or trustee de son tort by intermeddling with the performance of the trust (k), or by dealing with the property in a manner not warranted by the terms of his employment or agency (l), or in a manner inconsistent with the performance of trusts of which he is cognisant (m). A person does not, however, become a constructive trustee merely by acting as the solicitor or agent of trustees in transactions within their legal powers, although of a character of which a court of equity would disapprove, unless he receives and becomes chargeable with some part of the trust property, or unless he knowingly assists in a dishonest and fraudulent act on the part of the trustees (n).

Solicitors and agents.

(g) A person whose acts are referable to his appointment as a trustee is not to be deemed a trustee de son tort (Mara v. Browne, [1896] 1 Ch. 199, C. A., per Lord HERSCHELL, at p. 207).

(h) Re Barney, Barney v. Barney, [1892] 2 Ch. 265; Mara v. Browne, supra, per A. L. SMITH, L.J., at p. 209; see p. 47, ante. A person who, without having been validly appointed, acts as trustee, is liable as such (Ruckham v. Siddall (1850), 1 Mac. & G. 607, C. A., per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 621; Pearce v. Pearce (1856), 22 Beav. 248; Hennessey v. Bray (1863), 33 Beav. 96, 102). If a person, not expressly a trustee, buys property, or otherwise traffics, with the money of another, the law raises a trust by implication and clothes that person with a fiduciary character for the purpose of making him accountable (Docker v. Somes (1834), 2 My. & K. 655, per Lord BROUGHAM, L.C., at p. 665; compare Re Franklyn, Franklyn v. Franklyn (1913), 30 T. L. R. 187, C. A.). It is not within the scope of a solicitor's business to constitute himself a constructive trustee, and, therefore, his doing so does not bind and make liable as a constructive trustee a partner who is not aware of the dealings establishing the constructive trusteeship (Mara v. Browne, supra, at pp. 208, 212, 214; but see Blyth v. Fladgate, Morgan v. Blyth, Smith v. Blyth, [1891] 1 Ch. 337).

The fact that a person has had trust funds in his hands as solicitor to the trustees does not make him chargeable as a constructive trustee (Re Spencer, Spencer v. Hart (1881), 51 L. J. (CH.) 271, C. A., per BAGGALLAY, L.J., at p. 273; Brinsden v. Williams, [1894] 1 Ch. 185; Plaskitt v. Eddis (1898), 79 L. T. 136).

198. Where property is given to a person upon trust, there is a presumption that the property is given to him entirely as a trustee and not to any extent beneficially (o). Where, however, the trust does not exhaust the whole beneficial interest in the property, this presumption can be rebutted by an indication in the instrument of disposition that he is intended to take the residue of it for his own benefit (p).

* A gift of property by will to a person upon trust to carry out certain purposes creates a resulting trust of so much as is not required for the fulfilment of those purposes (q); but under a gift to a person subject to the carrying out of certain purposes, described in the will as trusts or charges, he takes the property beneficially after the purposes have been fulfilled (r).

Where a testator gives specific portions of his personal property to his executors upon trust, and elsewhere in the will calls them trustees, he does not thereby constitute them trustees of the rest of his personal property (*Batteley v. A gift of property to persons named as executors and trustees, to be disposed of to such person or persons and in such manner and proportion as they think proper, has been held an absolute beneficial gift to them (*Gibbs v. A gift to a person for a trust or purpose, which he is left at liberty either to perform or not at his option, is a beneficial gift to him (s). The trust or purpose in that case is rather the motive for the gift than the specific object for which it is given (t).

A person who accepts a trust to sell or otherwise deal with or manage property for others undertakes, on becoming trustee, so long as he occupies that position, not to sell, deal with, or manage the property for his own benefit and advantage (u), and he must not intentionally place himself in a position in which his interest may conflict with his duty (a). No act of his can restrict or prejudice the title of his cestui que trust (b).

200. No right to defeat a trust exists in the person who happens to be the depositary of the trust property unless that right has been specifically given by the instrument creating the trust (c). A trustee cannot justify the application of part of a trust fund to other purposes by suggesting that enough will remain of the fund to answer the purposes of the trust (d).

and cestui que trust subsists, the possession of the trust property by the trustee is the possession of the cestui que trust (f). If property is given to the trustee to sell, it remains in him for that purpose until something is done to put an end to the character in which he stands; he is bound to protect the interest of the cestui que trust without the intervention of the cestui que trust; and the length of time during which he has omitted to discharge his trust is no bar to his power or duty to perform it (g).

Where a trustee has as such taken possession of trust property, he cannot hold on adversely to a cestui que trust after his estate as trustee has determined; but his continuance in possession is deemed that of the cestui que trust (h).

(ii.) Extent of Estate.

202. The estate taken by a trustee in the trust property may be either expressly conferred on him by the terms of the instrument of trust or implied therefrom (i).

Where such property is assured unto a trustee to the use of or in trust for some other person or persons, the legal estate vests in the other person or persons, if the assurance is by an instrument inter vivos (l); but, if the assurance is by will, the vesting of the legal estate depends upon the intention of the testator as expressed or as implied from the extent and nature of the trusts, powers and duties reposed in the trustee (m). A devise of freehold property to a trustee upon trust to stand seised to the use of a beneficiary may, in the absence of indication of a contrary intention, vest the legal estate in the trustee (n).

206. Subject to these statutory provisions the quantum of estate taken by a trustee may be defined by the instrument of trust (t); but the definition is liable to be modified by the other contents or evident intention of the instrument in the case of a will (a), and, sometimes, even in the case of a deed (b). If not expressly defined it is determined, in the case of a will, by the nature of the trusts, powers and duties reposed in the trustee (c). Before these enactments, where real property was devised to trustees for particular purposes, it was held that the legal estate therein was vested in them as long as the execution of the trust required it, and no longer; and that as soon as the purposes were satisfied, it vested in the person beneficially entitled to the property (*Doe d. Under a devise of freehold and copyhold lands to trustees in trust for a son, to be transferred to him as soon as he should attain twenty-one years, and in case he should die before attaining that age then to another person, his heirs and assigns, the trustees were held to take an estate determinable when the son attained twenty-one years, since that fully effectuated the purposes of the will (*Doe d. being carried into effect does not cut down the estate of a trustee under a will which might continue for a longer period (d). An estate in a trustee dependent on a purpose respecting the trust property or the income thereof which he is directed to carry out (1) does not come into being if the purpose is dependent on a contingency which never arises (e) or fails by reason of its illegality (f), and (2) is determined when the purpose ceases on an event contemplated by the instrument creating the trust (g), but (3) is not determined by the accomplishment of the purpose (h), unless the instrument so directs (i).

207. As regards freehold, copyhold and leasehold property, where there is an indefinite devise of property to trustees and their heirs upon trust either to pay or allow a beneficiary to receive the rents during life, or for a purpose which does not require for its performance that they should have the entire estate, and this devise is followed either (1) by a simple remainder to another person in fee simple or in fee tail, or (2) by an absolute interest as another person shall appoint, or (3) by a new devise to a person in fee simple or fee tail, or otherwise giving an absolute interest, the estate of the trustees is by implication limited to the life of the first beneficiary or to the duration of the purpose for which the trust is created (k).

208. Where an estate is given to trustees, all the trusts which they are to perform must, at least prima facie, be performed by them by virtue of and in respect of the estate vested in them (l). Where one of the duties imposed on them is to sell the trust estate if they should deem the sale expedient, they can only do this by exercising dominion over the fee simple, and therefore in such case, even without apt words, there would be strong reason for holding that they were intended to take the fee (m); but where the purposes of a trust on which an estate is devised to trustees are such as not to require a fee in them, then, if subject to the specified trusts the estate is given over, the parties taking under such devise over take legal estates, the estate given to the trustees being taken to have been meant to be co-extensive only with the trust to be performed (n).

Where, therefore, there are recurring occasions for the exercise of active duties by trustees constituted by a will and no repeated devises to them to enable them to perform their duties, the legal estate, if once in the trustees, is deemed to be vested in them throughout, notwithstanding the duration in the meantime of what would, but for the recurring duties, be construed as uses executed in the beneficiaries (o).

209. In the following cases trustees take the entire estate or an estate so long as the particular trust continues:—

A devise to trustees upon trust to pay over the rents and profits of freehold property to a beneficiary during his life vests the legal estate in them during his life (p). On the other hand, if the trust is to permit and suffer the beneficiary to take the rents and profits during his life, he takes the legal estate for his life (q). Even in the latter case, however, the legal estate remains vested in the trustees if there is any direction or any indication of an intention that they shall actively interfere (r), as, for instance, if the beneficiary is to receive the rents and profits with the approbation of the trustees (s), or is only to receive the net rents and profits, which implies that the trustees shall pay the outgoings (t), or if the trust is for the separate use of a female beneficiary, in which case the necessity of protecting her interest is held to vest the estate in the trustees (u).

The law is the same where property is devised not directly to trustees, but to the intent that they shall receive the rents and profits and pay them to the beneficiary (Doe d. Gratrez v. Homfray, supra; Davies to Jones and Evans (1833), 24 Ch. D. 190; Stevenson v. Liverpool Corporation (1874), L. R. 10 Q. Smith* (1603), Moore (K. B.), 753; Bush v. Allen (1695), 5 Mod. Rep. 63, 101 (HOLT, C.J., dissenting); Anthony v. Rees (1831), 2 Cr. & J. 75; but see *London and South-Western Rail. Co. v. Where the trust is, in the alternative, to pay the rents and profits to a beneficiary or permit him to receive them during his life, it has been held that if the trust is in a deed the first alternative prevails and vests the legal estate in the trustee (a), but that if it is in a will effect will be given to the second alternative so as to vest the legal estate in the beneficiary (b).

Tenure and Transmission of Trust
Property.

Where real property is devised to trustees upon trust to convey (2) Trust to convey. it to the person or persons designated in the will, they take the entire legal estate, since without it they cannot convey the property (c). If, however, the trust is preceded by a trust to permit a beneficiary to occupy a house and to receive the rents and profits during his life or until another person attains twenty-one years, the legal estate vests in the beneficiary for his life or until the other person attains twenty-one years (d).

A devise to trustees upon trust to pay debts or legacies, or an annuity, vests the legal estate in them for that purpose, even if there is a trust to permit a person to receive the rents (e), but in such a case a devise to trustees of property merely charged with such payments has not that effect (f). Where, however, under the language of the will, trustees who are also executors take the legal estate, during the life of a beneficiary, in real property charged with payment of debts, the charge of debts which as executors they are bound to pay has the effect of extending their legal estate beyond the life of the beneficiary (g).

(3) Trust or charge for payment of debts, legacies or annuities.

If a trustee holds shares in a company, he has the same liabilities in respect of them as if he was beneficial owner thereof, even though the fact of the trusteeship is noted in the company's books, but is entitled to indemnity (o).

215. On the death of a sole or last surviving trustee all personal estate, including chattels real, vested in him subject to the trust devolves upon his personal representatives (b). Similarly, any estate or interest of inheritance, or limited to the heir as special occupant (c), in any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, other than copyhold or customary land vested in the tenant on the court rolls (d), vested in such trustee on any trust, devolves to and becomes vested in his personal representatives or representative from time to time, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition by him in like manner as if it were a chattel real; and the like powers for one only of several joint personal representatives, as well as for a single personal representative and for all the personal representatives together, to dispose of and otherwise deal with the property belong to his personal representatives or representative for the time being, with all the like incidents, but subject to all the like rights, equities and obligations, as if it were a chattel real vesting in them or him (e). Where he is a trustee of copyhold or customary land of which he is tenant on the court rolls, the land descends on his death to his customary heir (f).

It has been suggested that until probate or administration has been taken out the legal estate vests in the heir; see Re Pilling's Trusts (1884), 26 Ch. D. 432; John v. John, [1898] 2 Ch. 573, 576, C. A.; but see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., p. 5, note (g). Before this Act freehold trust estates could be devised and would pass under a general devise unless a contrary intention was shown, e.g., by a charge of debts (Re Bellis's Trusts (1877), 5 Ch. D. 504). In default of a devise freehold trust estates descended to the heirs of the trustee (Re Cunningham and Froyling, [1891] 2 Ch. 567), except that after the 7th August, 1874, if the trustee was a bare trustee, such estates devolved on his personal representatives (Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 38), s. 6; Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 48); and see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., pp. 5, 6.

216. On an appointment of new trustees the trust property ought to be vested in all the persons who, after the appointment, are the trustees thereof (g). The transfer by which this is effected, though it is frequently made previously to or by the same instrument as the appointment, ought, in strictness, to be made only after the appointment has been completed (h).

217. Where a deed by which a new trustee is appointed to perform a trust contains a declaration by the appointor to the effect that any estate or interest in any land or chattel subject to the trust, or the right to recover and receive any debt or thing in action subject to the trust, is to vest in the persons who by virtue of the deed become and are the trustees for performing the trust, the declaration, without any conveyance or assignment, operates to vest the estate, interest or right in those persons as joint tenants and for the purposes of the trust (i). Similarly, where a deed by which a retiring trustee is discharged under the power given by statute (j) contains a similar declaration by the retiring and continuing trustees and by the other persons, if any, empowered to appoint trustees, the declaration, without any conveyance or assignment, operates to vest the estate, interest or right to which it relates in the continuing trustees alone as joint tenants and for the purposes of the trust (k). The declaration cannot in either case extend to or include a legal estate or interest in copyhold or customary land, or land conveyed by way of mortgage for securing money subject to the trust, or any share, stock, annuity or property which is only transferable in books kept by a company or other body, or in manner directed by or under Act of Parliament (l).

For the purpose of the registration of the deed in any registry, the person or persons making the declaration are deemed the conveying party or parties, and the conveyance is deemed to be made by him or them under a statutory power (m).

221. By statute (r) the High Court, and in cases within their respective jurisdictions a palatine court (s) and a county court (t), may make a vesting order as to trust property, and as to property which, for the purposes of those powers, is deemed to be held by a person as a trustee (a), where it is impossible or difficult to deal with the property without such order (b).

SECT. 3.

Estate vesting under the order.
Effect of vesting order.

Where the order is consequential on the appointment of a new trustee, the land is vested for such estate as the court directs in the persons who on the appointment are the trustees (e). Where the order relates to a trustee entitled jointly with another person, and the trustee is out of the jurisdiction of the court or cannot be found, the land or right is vested in such other person either alone or with some other person (f).

225. A vesting order, where it is consequential on the appointment of a new trustee, has the same effect as if the persons who before the appointment were the trustees, if any, had duly executed all proper conveyances of the land for such estate as the court directs, or if there is no such person, or no such person of full capacity, then as if such person had existed and been of full capacity, and had duly executed all proper conveyances of the land for such estate as the court directs; and in every other case a vesting order has the same effect as if the trustee or other person, or description or class of persons, to whose rights or supposed rights the statutory provisions as to vesting orders relate, had been an ascertained and existing person of full capacity, and had executed a conveyance or release to the effect intended by the order (g).

conclusive.

226. Where a vesting order is made as to land under the Trustee Act, 1893 (h), or under the Lunacy Act, 1890 (i), founded on an allegation of the personal incapacity of a trustee, or on an allegation that a trustee is out of the jurisdiction of the court or cannot be found, or that it is uncertain which of several trustees was the survivor, or whether the last trustee is living or dead, or on an allegation that a trustee has died intestate without an heir, or has died and it is not known who is his heir or personal representative or devisee, the fact that the order has been so made is conclusive evidence of the matter so alleged in any court upon any question as to the validity of the order (k).

227. The court may, however, direct a reconveyance and the payment of costs occasioned by any such order if improperly obtained (l).

228. Where land is subject to a contingent right in an unborn person or class of unborn persons who, on coming into existence, would in respect thereof become entitled to or possessed of the land on trust, the court may make an order releasing the land from the contingent right or vesting in any person the estate to or of which the unborn person or class of unborn persons would, on coming into existence, be entitled to or possessed of in the land (m).

229. Where a court gives judgment or makes an order directing the sale or mortgage of land, every person who is entitled to or possessed of the land or a contingent right therein, and is a party to the action or proceeding in which the judgment or order is given or made, or is otherwise bound by the judgment or order, is deemed to be so entitled to or possessed of, as the case may be, as a trustee within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1893 (n); and the court may, if it thinks expedient, make an order vesting the land, or any part thereof, for such estate as may seem fit, in the purchaser or mortgagee or in any other person (a).

230. Where a judgment is given for the specific performance of a contract concerning land or for the partition or sale in lieu of partition or exchange of any land, or generally where a judgment is given for the conveyance of land, either in cases arising out of the doctrine of election or otherwise, the court may declare that any of the parties to the action are trustees of the land or any part thereof within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1893 (b), and may declare that the interests of unborn persons who might claim under any party to the action, or under the will or voluntary settlement of any deceased person who was during his lifetime a party to the contract or transaction concerning which the judgment is given, are the interests of persons who, on coming into existence, would be trustees within the meaning of the Trustee Act, 1893 (b), and thereupon the court may make a vesting order relating to the rights of those persons, born and unborn, as if they had been trustees (c).

The procedure relating to orders under the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), applies (R. S. C., Ord. 55, r. 13B). Before the Lunacy Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 40), these powers were exercisable by the judge in lunacy; and it was sometimes necessary to make an application and to draw up the order thereon both in the Chancery Division of the High Court and in Lunacy (Re Stewart (1860), 8 W. R. 297, C. A.; Re Boyce (1864), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 205, C. A.; Re M., [1899] 1 Ch. 79).

It may be made where the trustee is a criminal lunatic (Re E., [1906] 1 Ch. 730, C. A.), or where, under a power for that purpose contained in the instrument of trust, a new trustee has been appointed in place of a lunatic trustee (Re East (a Person of Unsound Mind not so Found by Inquisition), Re Bellwood's Will Trusts (1873), 8 Ch. App. 735). Applications for vesting orders are governed by the same rules and principles as applications for the appointment of new trustees; see p. 78, ante. The application should be served on the committee of a lunatic trustee (Re Saumarez (1886), 8 De G. M. & G. 390, C. A.), but need not be served on a trustee of unsound mind not so found (Re East (a Person of Unsound Mind not so Found by Inquisition), Re Bellwood's Will Trusts, supra; Re Green (a Person of Unsound Mind not so Found), Re Murlon's Trusts (1875), 10 Ch. The order may vest the property in the other trustees (a); but such an order is, it seems, only made when the land is immediately divisible (b), and not when the trustees have continuing duties to perform (c).

Where a trustee has become lunatic it has been the practice to appoint a new trustee and not to vest the trust property directly in the beneficiary (d).

the execution of a trust (k); but a trustee, who has accepted a trust, cannot from mere caprice or other trivial cause, or owing to some act or circumstances affecting himself personally, throw up the trust at the expense of the cestui que trust (l). He may, however, insist on being discharged at the expense of the trust property, if he has served for a long time and is of advanced age and in failing health (m), or if much litigation has taken place (n), or other difficult circumstances have arisen in connexion with the trust which did not exist and were not contemplated when he undertook the office (o). In such cases, if he cannot otherwise obtain his discharge, he may apply for it to a court of equity in an action to administer the trust (p), and he is not bound to show that there is some other person ready to accept the trust (q). If no person is willing to do so it may be necessary to postpone the discharge of the trustee and keep him before the court; but if this is done the court takes care that he shall not suffer thereby (r).

242. Except so far as authorised by statute (s) or by the instrument, if any, creating the trust (t), a trustee can only retire during the continuance of a trust by the valid appointment of another trustee in his place (a).

By statute (b), if and so far as a contrary intention is not expressed by the instrument, if any, creating the trust, and subject to the provisions of that instrument, where there are more than two trustees,

If a new trustee has not been effectually appointed, the retiring trustee remains liable (Pearce v. Pearce (1856), 22 Beav. 248).

one of them may by deed declare that he desires to be discharged from the trust; in that case, if his co-trustees and the other person, if any, who is empowered to appoint trustees of the trust consent by deed to his discharge and to the vesting of the trust property in the co-trustees alone, he is deemed to have retired from the trust, and is by the deed discharged therefrom, without any new trustee being appointed in his place (c). When the Public Trustee is appointed a trustee or co-trustee may retire under the above provision without the consents thereby required and notwithstanding that there are not more than two trustees (d).

SECT. 4.
Vacation of Office.

243. Where a trustee is justified in retiring, he is not liable to pay any costs occasioned thereby; but whether he is entitled to his own costs in the matter depends on the circumstances of the case (c). A trustee on retiring, and the representative of a deceased trustee on transferring the trust property to a new trustee, has a right to an examined copy of the deed appointing the new trustee, but not to a duplicate thereof, or to an attested copy of the instrument creating the trust (f).

Costs and
rights of

244. Where a trustee retires in favour of another person in consideration of a sum of money paid to him by that person, a court of equity will declare the deed containing the appointment of that person as trustee to be void, so that the trust and the trust property will remain in the trustees in whom they were vested before it was executed (g).

Corrupt retirement.

245. A trustee who retires in favour of a new trustee, with the knowledge or suspicion that a breach of trust is intended to be committed after his retirement, is liable for any loss occasioned by the breach of trust (h). If one of two trustees who feels no confidence in his co-trustee retires in favour of a new trustee appointed by that co-trustee, he renders himself liable to grave risk in the event of any subsequent misconduct on the part of the continuing trustee and the new trustee (i).

Resumption of trust,

247. A trustee who has retired from the trust cannot after the lapse of several years resume his position as trustee without being formally reappointed (l), notwithstanding that his retirement and the appointment of his successor were not formally effected (m).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Removal.

Removal by appointment of new trustee.

248. A trustee can be removed from the trust by the appointment of a new trustee in his place in any circumstances in which the power, if any, in the instrument creating the trust or the statutory power (n) authorises such an appointment (o).

Removal by the court.

249. The court removes a trustee where he refuses to execute the trust (p), or has mismanaged the trust (q), or has disqualified himself by his circumstances or conduct from continuing to hold the office (r), and may, perhaps, do so if his continuance in office would be likely to be detrimental to the trust owing to his being out of sympathy with the objects of it (s) or with the cestuis que trust (a). A trustee will not, however, be removed against his will on account of a pecuniary embarrassment which has ceased to exist and which does not appear to have imperilled the interests of the cestuis que

M'Glynn*, [1894] 1 I. R. 74. The court, on application, removes a trustee who has committed a felony (Re Danson (1899), 48 W. R. 73), or a trustee who has become bankrupt, where in administering the trust he has to receive or deal with trust money so that he has the opportunity of misappropriating it (Re Barker's Trusts (1875), 1 Ch. D. 43; Re Adams' Trust (1879), 12 Ch. D. 634), or where, besides the bankruptcy, he has acted in a manner prejudicial to the trust (Re Betts, Maclean v. Betts (1897), 41 Sol. Jo. 209). Friction or hostility between a trustee and the person who has the present beneficial interest in the trust property is not of itself a reason for the removal of the trustee; but it is taken into account, where it is grounded on the mode in which the trust has been administered, or where it has arisen wholly or partially out of substantial overcharges by the trustee against the trust property (Letterstedt v. Broers (1884), 9 App. Cas. 371, 389, P. C.).

Procedure for effecting removal.

250. In the absence of circumstances which, under the power, if any, in the instrument creating the trust, or under the statutory power (d), authorise the appointment of a new trustee, the court cannot order the removal of a trustee against his will in proceedings under the Trustee Act, 1898 (e), but an action must be instituted for the purpose (f).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Death.

251. The office of trustee terminates on his death (g), but his estate may remain subject to liabilities incurred during his trusteeship (h).

Death of trustee.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Termination of Trust.

252. When a trust has terminated, the persons who have become absolutely entitled to the trust property can require the trustee to transfer it to them at their expense (i), on furnishing to him clear proof that his duties and responsibilities are at an end (k).

Transfer of

The court cannot in proceedings under the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), inquire as to the alleged insanity of a trustee where it is denied by him (Re Combs, supra). The court usually effects the removal of a trustee by appointing another person in his place.

Termination of trusts by cestui que
trust.

254. Where all the actual or possible cestuis que trust are in existence and sui juris, they may together put an end to the trust in whole or in part or discharge a trustee therefrom (n). On the other hand, a trustee cannot by an act of his own, without communication with his cestui que trust, denude himself of the character of trustee till he has performed his trust (o).

termination.

255. A trustee should preserve a record of the termination of the trust, in order to preclude the possibility of a question being subsequently raised as to whether it has in fact taken place (p).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Release.

Right of trustee to release.

256. Where there is an instrument declaring a clearly defined trust, and the trustee pays the income or transfers the capital of the trust property in strict accordance with the trust, he may on the termination of the trust require an acknowledgment that the accounts are settled (q), but he has no right to require a release under seal (r). Where, however, there is merely a parol trust, and no evidence as to its exact terms or as to the amount of the trust where it exceeds in amount the sum due on the mortgage and the trustee has notice of subsequent incumbrances on it (Re Bell, Jeffery v. Sayles, [1896] 1 Ch. 1, C. A.; Hockey v. Western, [1898] 1 Ch. 350, 356, C. A.).

Where a trustee is called upon to part with the trust property on the ground that the cestui que trust has put an end to the trust, he is entitled to clear evidence of the fact that the trust is at an end, including the production of any deed or document which has effected that result (Holford v. Phipps (1841), 3 Beav. 434); and he is entitled to his costs of legal proceedings instituted to compel him to part with the trust property, where sufficient evidence of the termination of the trust has not been previously produced to him (ibid.). The existence of this power of terminating the trust may render valid a disposition which would otherwise transgress the rule against perpetuities; see title PERPETUITIES, Vol. XXII., pp. 319, 326, 327.

A trustee is not in all cases entitled to a formal deed of release; in many cases the receipt of the cestui que trust is a sufficient discharge (Re Roberts's Trusts (1869), 38 L. J. (CH.) 708, per MALINS, V.-C., at p. 709). The desire for a release on the part of trustees is not encouraged; a receipt from a person entitled to money is the best release for the payment of it (Re Hoskin's Trusts (1877), 5 Ch. D. 229, per MALINS, V.-C., at p. 234), and no more can be required where executors or trustees are the persons entitled to receive trust money (Re Oater's Trusts (No. 2) (1858), 25 Beav. 366, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 367; Re Hoskin's Trusts, supra).

property, or where the trustee is required to deal with the property in a manner differing from the strict tenor of the trust, he can legally demand a release by deed (s). Where a cestui que trust has settled his share of the trust property, the trustee is entitled to a release from him, but can only require a receipt from the trustees to whom it is to be transferred (t).

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

257. The first duty of a trustee is to acquaint himself with the terms of the trust under which he acts (a), and with the state of the trust property (b), and with the contents of all such deeds, notices, and other documents and papers relating to or affecting the trust property, as come into his possession or under his control (c).

Acquaintance with the trust and its affairs.

258. A trustee must take all reasonable and proper measures to obtain possession of the trust property if it is outstanding (d), and to get in all debts and funds due to the trust estate (e), and to

259. A trustee must not connive at or knowingly facilitate any act or conduct of another person which would involve a breach of trust or occasion loss or risk to the trust property (l); and he must not set up or abet an adverse title or claim of another person against his cestui que trust (m), or undertake a duty or put himself in a position which is inconsistent with his duty as trustee (n), or act in a manner inconsistent with that duty (o). He must assume the validity of the equitable title of his cestui que trust until it is actually negated (p). At the same time, he has a right to know the title of those who pretend to be his cestuis que trust (q); and if he receives notice of an adverse claim and of an intention to hold him liable in case he disregards it, he may obtain a decision of the court as to his course of action (r).

law to the administration of the trust (a). The fact of a trust being administered by the court does not absolve the trustee from his duties with respect to it (b).

It may be in some circumstances necessary or beneficial that a trustee should deviate from the strict letter of his trust; but in that case he does so under the obligation and at the peril of afterwards satisfying the court that the deviation was necessary or beneficial (c), unless he is relieved or debarred from observing the directions contained in the instrument creating or regulating the trust (1) by the request and consent of all the beneficiaries, where all of them are sui juris and concur (d); or (2) by an order of a court of competent jurisdiction (e); or (3) by an overriding statute (f); or (4) by the fact that the directions are illegal (g), or are incapable of being observed (h).

A trustee is bound to execute the trust with fidelity and reasonable diligence (i), and ought to conduct its affairs in the same manner as an ordinary prudent man of business would conduct his own affairs; but beyond this he is not bound to adopt further precautions (k). In cases of doubt or difficulty he may take legal advice

Trustees.

261. A trustee must not in any way make use of the trust property or of his position as trustee for his own interest or private advantage (p), nor may he enter into engagements in which he has or can have a personal interest which conflicts or possibly may conflict with the interests of those whom he is bound to protect (q).

A person in a fiduciary position, unless expressly authorised to do so, is not entitled to make a profit out of his position (Bray v. Ford, [1896] A. C. 44, per Lord HERSHELL, at p. 51). Where a bribe is paid to a trustee to induce him to sell or let trust property, the sale or lease will be void (Chandler v. Bradley, [1897] 1 Ch. 315). It is a breach of trust for a trustee to make an advance out of the trust fund to a beneficiary, under a power for that purpose, in order to enable the beneficiary to repay a debt due to himself (Molynaux v. Fletcher, [1898] 1 Q. B. 648); though he may accept repayment out of an advance of trust money to his debtor on the security of a mortgage, if it was not made with that distinct object (Butler v. Butler (1877), 7 Ch. D. 116, C. A.); and see note (a), p. 131, post. A trustee who is a solicitor may demand and receive from a client, a third party, to whom he lends trust money, the costs of preparing the mortgage by which it is secured (Whitney v. Smith (1869), 4 Ch. App. 513).

SECT. 1.
Duties of Trustees.
Personal responsibility.

262. A trustee, being personally responsible for the exercise of his judgment and for the performance of his duty, cannot escape responsibility by leaving to another person the exercise of that judgment (a) or the performance of that duty (b), even if he is one of several trustees and the person to whom he leaves it is his co-trustee (c); nor may he allow a stranger to participate in the management and control of the trust (d). If he leaves a trust matter to a co-trustee or employs an agent, he remains liable to his cestui que trust for the acts and conduct of the co-trustee or agent (e), except so far as the law allows him to transact the affairs of the trust through a co-trustee or responsible agent (f).

A trustee is liable if he allows the trust property to remain in the custody or under the control of another person (g), except when and for so long as the affairs of the trust render it necessary or proper (h). Where there are several trustees, one of them cannot safely leave the trust property in the sole possession or under the sole control of another of them (i), except where the other is acting in the capacity of broker or agent of the trustees and is dealing with the property in that capacity (k), and except as regards title deeds and documents which for the sake of convenience may be kept by one of several co-trustees (l).

Concurrence of all trustees necessary.

263. Where there is more than one trustee, the concurrence of all is necessary in a transaction affecting the trust property, and a majority cannot bind the minority (m). So a receipt for money given by one of two trustees will not be a discharge (n). But an ex post facto approval by one trustee of the exercise of a discretion by the other seems to be sufficient (o); and a notice of intention to renew a lease is good if given to one of two trustees (p).

trustee to hold an even hand between the parties interested under the trust, and to look to the interests of all and not to those of any particular beneficiary or class of beneficiaries (r). He must not be a partisan of one of several cestuis que trust (a).

Assigns and incum-brancers.

265. A trustee stands in the same fiduciary relation and has the same duties towards the assigns of a beneficiary or persons in whose favour a beneficiary has given a charge on the trust property as towards the beneficiary himself (b). Notwithstanding the statutory power of a mortgagee to give receipts (c), a trustee is not bound to hand over to the mortgagee of the share of a beneficiary the whole of the share which the beneficiary was entitled to receive, and does not act unreasonably in refusing to do so where, to his knowledge, a question exists as to the right of the mortgagee to the whole of the share (d). He cannot, however, require an assignee of the share of a beneficiary to deliver to him the assignment and other documents of title before handing over the share (e).

income and corpus.

266. It is the duty of a trustee to pay the income and the corpus of the trust property to the persons who are entitled to them respectively (f); when he is in doubt as to who these persons are, he

As a general rule the rights of cestuis que trust cannot be affected by the act of their trustee (Re Swan (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 34, per WOOD, V.-C., at p. 37); but a trustee may pay out to one beneficiary his share of the trust property immediately on his becoming entitled thereto in possession, notwithstanding the risk of the shares of the other beneficiaries being reduced by subsequent depreciation or losses (*Fenwick v. should apply to the court for its direction on the subject (g). He is liable if he wilfully or negligently or through a mistake on a point of law pays to the wrong person (h), and may be held liable even if he is induced by forgery or fraud to do so (i). He is not, however, liable if he pays to a beneficiary originally entitled where he had no notice of the derivative title of the person actually entitled, provided that his ignorance of it is not due to any negligence on his part (k), and in other cases ignorance of the true facts may relieve him from liability for payment to the wrong person (l).

to do so, he is liable to the costs of proceedings to compel the information or accounts (a). He is also bound to allow a cestui que trust to inspect the trust accounts and all documents relating to the trust (b), and ought to explain to the cestui que trust what his rights are (c). A trustee is, however, entitled to receive from the cestui que trust the costs of furnishing the information or accounts, and to require the cestui que trust either to pay those costs in advance or guarantee their payment (d); and indulgence is shown to a trustee from whom an account is demanded after a long lapse of time (e).

The cestui que trust can always challenge the amount paid to or retained by a trustee out of the trust property in respect of costs, charges, and expenses incurred by himself (f).

269. A trustee is not bound to tell a cestui que trust what incumbrances the cestui que trust has himself created, or which of the incumbrancers have given notice of their charges; nor is he bound in any other way to assist the cestui que trust in selling or mortgaging his beneficial interest (g). A stranger who proposes to buy that interest or lend money on it has no greater right than the cestui que trust himself (h). If the trustee, as a matter of courtesy, answers the inquiry, he is not bound to have made previous inquiries of his co-trustees or of the solicitor to the trust, or to do anything

There is no trust or other relation between a trustee and a stranger about to deal with a cestui que trust; and although the stranger, in making inquiries, may be regarded as authorised by the cestui que trust to make them, this does not give him a right to information which the cestui que trust himself is not entitled to demand (ibid.).

more than answer honestly to the best of his actual knowledge and belief (i); and if he does this, he exposes himself to no liability, unless he binds himself by a warranty, or so expresses himself as to be estopped from afterwards denying the truth of what he said, or unless in some other way he undertakes a greater responsibility (k).

Enforcement of duty.

270. If a trustee wilfully refuses to do an act which it is his duty to do in his position of trustee, he will be compelled by a court of equity to do it (l), and may be ordered to pay the costs of any legal proceedings rendered necessary by his refusal (m).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Conversion of Trust Property.

Duty to convert.

* 271. It is the duty of a trustee to sell and convert the trust¹ property (1) where the instrument creating the trust directs that it shall be sold and converted (n); (2) where the property consists of hazardous or unauthorised investments (o); and (3) where the property cannot be held to the advantage of beneficiaries for life and in

A trustee who has signed a memorandum to the effect that he has not received notice of any prior charge on the trust property after having in fact received such a notice, which he has forgotten, is not liable under the memorandum to mortgagees of the trust property who induced him to sign it under the impression that his solicitors had approved of it, whereas they were aware that this was not the case (Porter v. Moore, [1904] 2 Ch. 367).

But if, under the terms of the trust, the trustee has a discretion as to the time or manner of doing the act, the court does not interfere with the exercise of that discretion (*Tempest v. (n) Re Atkins, Newman v. Sinclair (1899), 81 L. T. 421. Where this is the case, the trustee must sell or convert the property within a reasonable period (Bate v. Hooper (1855), 5 De G. R. 13 Eq. 232; Re Atkins, Newman v. Sinclair, supra). The period is ordinarily twelve months (Bate v. Hooper, supra; Grayburn v. Clarkson, supra); but he may be bound to realise the property sooner or be justified in prolonging the period (Buxton v. Buxton (1835), 1 My. & Cr. 80; Paddon v. Richardson (1855), 7 De G. M. & G. 563, C. A.); and a trust to sell a business with all convenient speed with power to postpone sale has been held to authorise the postponement of the sale for two years (Re Smith, Arnold v. Smith, [1896] 1 Ch. 171). A power to postpone sale and conversion authorises the carrying on of a business for a reasonable period (Re Chancellor, Chancellor v. Brown (1884), 26 Ch. D. 42, C. A.). remainder, whether by reason of its being of a wasting nature (p) or of its being in reversion and not yielding a present income (q), unless the instrument creating the trust expressly or by implication requires or authorises abstention from sale and conversion (r).

272. If the instrument creating the trust expressly gives to the trustee a discretion as to conversion or non-conversion of the property, he may exercise it by refraining from conversion in spite of one cestui que trust being thereby benefited at the expense of another (s). With such an exercise of the discretion a court of equity does not interfere (t).

Discretion as to conversion.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Investment of Trust Funds.

273. Unless a trustee is expressly otherwise authorised, or required under the terms of his trust, he must duly and promptly invest all capital trust money coming to his hands (u), and all income which cannot be immediately applied for the purposes of the trust (a); and he is liable for any loss which may result from its being improperly invested (b) or being left uninvested for an unreasonable length of time (c), and for interest during the period of its being so left (d). The investment must be made in the name of the trustee (e), and, if there are several trustees, in the name of all of them (f), except where, under the conditions of the investment, it can only be made in the name of one (g).

investment.

274. The mode in which a trustee can invest trust moneys is primarily limited by the instrument creating the trust. Subject to any express directions contained in that instrument (h), and to any conditions thereby prescribed (i), he may invest the moneys in any manner thereby authorised (k), provided that in making the selection

(i) A common condition is the consent of one or more of the cestuis que trust, which may, generally speaking, be given either before or after the investment (Stevens v. Robertson (1868), 37 L. J. (CH.) 499, 502; but see Bateman v. Davis (1818), 3 Madd. 98). Where a cestui que trust improperly withholds his consent, the court dispenses with it (Costello v. O'Rourke (1869), 3 I. R. Eq. 172, 184).

The instrument may authorise an investment in foreign Government bonds passing by delivery (Arnould v. Grinstead (1872), 21 W. R. 155). A direction to invest in foreign Government securities authorises an investment in the securities of a subordinate Government, such as that of one of the United States of America (Cadell v. Earle (1877), 5 Ch. D. 710); but a power to invest in the stocks or securities of a British colony or dependency does not authorise an investment in the stocks of a province of the Dominion of Canada (Re Margon-Wilson's Estate, [1912] 1 Ch. 55, C. A.). A direction to hold existing Government securities includes Government bonds passing by delivery (Arnould v. Grinstead (1872), 21 W. R. 155). A power to leave the fund with a particular firm at interest does not authorise its being so left after a change in the personnel of the firm (Cummins v. Cummins (1845), 3 Jo. & Lat. 64; Re Tucker, Tucker v. Tucker, [1894] 1 Ch. 724; Smith v. Patrick, [1901] A. C. 282; and see Re Morrison, Morrison v. Morrison, [1901] 1 Ch. 701). An authority to retain shares in a particular company as part of the trust fund does not warrant the acquisition of additional shares in the company (Re Pugh, Banting v. Pugh, [1887] W. N. 143), or the acceptance of new shares if the company is reconstructed (Re Morris, Bucknill v. Morris (1885), 52 L. T. 402; Re Anson's Settlement, Lovelace (Earl) v. Anson, [1907] 2 Ch. 424; but see Re Smith, Smith v. Lewis, [1902] 2 Ch. 667). If bonus shares are allotted to the trustee in respect of his holding, he must at once sell them (Re Pugh, Banting v. Pugh, supra). In powers of investment, "a public company" includes any company incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69), or the Acts which it replaces (Re Sharp, Bishop v. Sharp (1890), 45 Ch. D. 286, C. A.; but see Re Castlehow, Lamont v. Carter, [1903] 1 Ch. 352), and "a company incorporated by statute" includes any company incorporated by charter granted under the authority of a General Act of Parliament (Ellis v. Borton, he uses proper care and caution, and avoids investments which are attended with hazard (l).

Sec. 1.

Duties of Trustees

Personal security

275. The instrument may authorise investment on personal security (a), including the security of the personal undertaking of an individual, as well as the security of personal property (b). A loan of trust money on personal security, however, must be made in good faith and in the interests of the cestuis que trust and not merely of the borrower (c), and cannot be made unless expressly authorised (d).

276. The language of the instrument of trust is strictly construed; and under a direction to trustees to invest the trust fund, or place out the trust fund at interest or on security, at their discretion, they can only invest on proper securities (e).

Investment at discretion.

Unless a trustee is expressly forbidden to do so by the instrument, if any, creating the trust (f), or unless such investment [1891] 1 Ch. 501, C. A.); but "a company created by statute" means a company expressly incorporated by a special Act of Parliament (Re Smith, Davidson v. Myrtil, [1896] 2 Ch. 590). A limited company registered and having its head office in the United Kingdom, where its board of directors meet to manage and control its affairs is "a company in the United Kingdom" although the property of the company is situated abroad and its operations are carried on abroad (Re Hilton, Gibbs v. Hale-Hinton, [1909] 2 Ch. 548, per NEVILLE, J., at p. 551). A power to invest in the preference stock of certain companies does not authorise an investment in their fully-paid preference shares (Re Willis, Spencer v. Willis, [1911] 2 Ch. 563). "A municipal corporation" does not include incorporated harbour trustees (Hutton v. Annan, [1898] A. C. 289; see Wood v. Middleton (1898), 79 L. T. 155). As to the meaning of "public stocks of the Bank of England," see Re Hill, Fettes v. Hill [1914] W. N. 132.

The trustee may lend the trust money to the beneficiary for life if there is a reasonable prospect of repayment by him (ibid., but see note (p), p. 121, ante). Where under a marriage settlement trustees are empowered with the consent of the wife to lend the trust money to the husband, it has been held that her consent cannot be given retrospectively (Bateman v. Davis (1818), 3 Madd. 98), and that her consent is necessary to every loan made to him from time to time and cannot be given prospectively, but that, unless the terms of her consent only authorise a loan for a limited time, the money may remain on loan to him indefinitely (*Child v. These enactments apply to funds held by a corporation in trust for a charity (Re Manchester Royal Infirmary, Manchester Royal Infirmary v. A.-G. (1889), 43 Ch. (1) Parliamentary stocks, public funds and Government securities of the United Kingdom; (2) real and heritable securities in Great Britain and Ireland; (3) stock of the Banks of England and Ireland; (4) India 3½ and 3 per cent. stock and any other capital stock from time to time issued by the Secretary of State in Council of India under the authority of Act of Parliament and charged on the revenues of India; (5) securities the interest of which is for the time being guaranteed by Parliament; (6) Consolidated Stock created by the Metropolitan Board of Works or by the London County Council and debenture stock created by the receiver for the Metropolitan Police District; (7) debenture or rentcharge or guaranteed or preference stock of any railway company in Great Britain or Ireland incorporated by special Act of Parliament and having during each of the years past before the date of the investment paid a dividend of not less than 3 per cent. per annum on its ordinary stock; (8) stock of any railway or canal company in Great Britain or Ireland whose undertaking is leased in perpetuity or for not less than 200 years at a fixed rental to any such railway company as is mentioned under item (7) either alone or jointly with any other railway company; (9) debenture stock of any railway company in India the interest on which is paid or guaranteed by the Secretary of State in Council of India; (10) "B" annuities of the Eastern Bengal, the East Indian, and the Scinde, Punjab and Delhi Railways, and any like annuities which may be from time to time created on the purchase of any other railway by the Secretary of State in Council of India and charged on the revenues of India, and which may be authorised by Act of Parliament to be accepted by trustees in lieu of any stock held by them in the purchased railway (see *Re Mansel, Rhodes v. Investment on mortgage debentures.

Investment on mortgage.

278. Unless expressly otherwise authorised by the instrument creating the trust or by statute, a trustee who has power to invest in real securities (l) can only invest on a legal first mortgage (m) of freehold or copyhold property, but not on a mortgage of property of from time to time by commissioners incorporated by Act of Parliament for the purpose of supplying water and having a compulsory power of levying rates over an area having, according to the returns of the last census prior to the date of investment, a population exceeding 50,000 (see Re Druiitt, Druiitt v. Dehler, [1903] 1 Ch. 446, C. A.). provided that during each of the ten years last past before the date of investment the rates levied by such commissioners have not exceeded 80 per cent. of the amount authorised by law to be levied; (15) stocks, funds and securities for the time being authorised for the investment of cash under the control of the High Court (see R. S. C., Ord. 22, r. 17; Yearly Practice of the Supreme Court, 1914, p. 319). (ii.) Colonial stock registered in the United Kingdom in accordance with the provisions of the Colonial Stock Acts, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 59) and 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 35), as amended by the Colonial Stock Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 62), and with respect to which there have been observed such conditions, if any, as the Treasury may by order notified in the London Gazette prescribe (Colonial Stock Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 62), s. 2). The Treasury keeps a list of colonial stocks in respect of which the above-mentioned provisions are for the time being complied with, and publishes the list in the London and Edinburgh Gazettes and in such other manner as may give the public full information on the subject (ibid.). (iii.) Water stock issued by the Metropolitan Water Board (Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7 c. 41), s. 17 (4)). A trustee may from time to time vary any of these investments (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53) s. 1). He may invest in them notwithstanding that they are redeemable and that the price exceeds the redemption value (ibid., s. 2 (1)), and may retain them until redemption (ibid., s. 2 (3)); except that he may not under his statutory power of investment purchase at a price exceeding its redemption value any stock mentioned or referred to under items (7), (9), (11), (12), (13) of clause (i.), supra, which is liable to be redeemed within fifteen years of the date of purchase at par or at some other fixed rate, or purchase any such stock as is mentioned or referred to under those items which is liable to be redeemed at par or at some other fixed rate at a price exceeding 15 per cent. above par or such other fixed rate (ibid., s. 2 (2)).

a speculative or insecure description (n) or of a wasting character (o). By statute (a) he may, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the trust, invest (1) on mortgage of property held for an unexpired term of not less than two hundred years and not subject to a reservation of rent greater than 1s. a year, or to any right of redemption, or to any condition for re-entry, except for non-payment of rent (b); and (2) on any charge made under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (c), or on mortgage of any such charge (d).

A trustee investing on mortgage must reasonably satisfy himself that the mortgagor can give a good title to the property (e). He is not, however, chargeable with breach of trust only upon the ground that he has accepted a shorter title than that to which a purchaser is in the absence of a special contract entitled to require (f), if the title accepted is such as a person acting with prudence and caution would have accepted (g). Similarly, where he properly lends money on the security of leasehold property, he is not chargeable with breach of trust only upon the ground that in making the loan he dispensed either wholly or partly with the production or investigation of the lessor's title (h).

A trustee investing on a real security must not join in a contributory mortgage (i) and must not arrange with the mortgagor for the continuance of the loan for a term of years (j). The loan should be made under the advice of a surveyor or valuer whom the trustee reasonably believed to be an able, practical surveyor or valuer, and who was instructed and employed, independently of the owner of the property, to report as to its value and propriety as a

A trustee lending money on the security of property on which he can lawfully lend is not chargeable with breach of trust by reason only of the proportion borne by the amount of loan to the value of the property at the time when the loan was made, if it appears that the loan does not exceed two-thirds of the value of the property as stated in such a report as mentioned in the text, supra, and was made under the advice of the surveyor or valuer expressed in the report (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 8 (1), (4): *Re Walker Walker v. SECT. 1.

Duties of Trustees.Change of Investments.

287. A trustee in the exercise of his power of investment may vary the investments from time to time (s), and may change a first-class security into another authorised investment yielding a better rate of interest (t). A trustee may do this, even at some risk to the capital of the trust estate, in order to provide the parent, who is the beneficiary for life, with a better income for the support and education of his children who are interested in remainder (a). Generally speaking, however, except so far as is expressly directed or authorised by the instrument creating the trust, a trustee must not invest with a view to the benefit of one beneficiary at the expense of another (b).

SECT. 2.—Powers and Discretions of Trustees.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General

Exercise of express
powers.

288. A trustee may exercise all such lawful powers as are expressly reposed in him by the instrument creating the trust (c), and may use such discretion with respect to the time and manner and extent of exercising them as is permitted by the terms of that instrument (d). He must, however, exercise the powers

Lewis*, [1902] 2 Ch. 667; see Re Brookes, Brookes v. Taylor, [1914] 1 Ch. 558. The court may, however, notwithstanding the opposition of the trustees, direct inquiries as to whether investments should be continued (Re D'Epinoix's Settlement, D'Epinoix v. Feltes, [1914] 1 Ch. 890).

T. 752; Re Atkins, Newman v. Sinclair (1899), 81 L. T. 421. Where there are two separate discretionary trusts for the benefit of the same beneficiary, each trust requires a separate and independent exercise of the discretion, and there reasonably and in good faith and for the purposes for which they were created (e).

289. Subject to any special provisions in the instrument creating the trust, a trustee may do acts which are reasonable and proper for realising the trust property (f) or for protecting it (g), and may make payments which are necessary for the due execution of the trust (h), and would be sanctioned by a court of equity if its sanction were applied for (i). As a rule, however, in any case of doubt, the trustee ought to obtain this sanction before so acting (k).

290. Where a power is discretionary and does not amount to an actual trust or obligation (l) the trustee will not be compelled to exercise it (m), even though its non-exercise will benefit one cestui que trust at the expense of another (n). Where the exercise of the power is obligatory, but the time and manner of its exercise are discretionary, the trustee will not be interfered with as regards those particulars (o).

SECT. 2.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Particular Powers.

Powers and Discretions of Trustees.

Power to give receipts.

Power to compound debts.

Adoption of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.

291. The receipt in writing of a trustee for money, securities or other personal property or effects, payable, transferable, or deliverable to him under a trust or power, exonerates the person paying, transferring, or delivering the same from seeing to the application or being answerable for any loss or misapplication thereof (p).

292. If and so far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument creating the trust, and subject to the terms of that instrument, two or more trustees acting together, or a sole acting trustee, where by the instrument, if any, creating the trust a sole trustee is authorised to execute the trusts and powers thereof, may, if and as he or they may think fit, accept any composition or any security, real or personal, for any debt or for any property, real or personal, claimed, and may allow any time for payment of any debt, and may compromise, compound, abandon, submit to arbitration, or otherwise settle any debt, account, claim or thing whatever relating to the trust; and, for any of those purposes, may enter into, give, execute, and do such agreements, instruments of composition or arrangement, releases and other things as may seem expedient, without being responsible for any loss occasioned by any act or thing so done by them or him in good faith (q).

293. As regards the powers given by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (r), and the covenants, provisions, stipulations and words which under that Act are deemed to be included or implied in any instrument, or are by the Act made applicable to any contract for sale or other transaction, trustees and other persons in a fiduciary position, whether acting through or without a solicitor, are not guilty of neglect or breach of duty, and do not become in any way liable, by reason of the omission in good faith on the part of themselves or their solicitor to negative, in any such instrument or in connexion with any such contract or transaction, the giving, inclusion, implication or application of any of those powers, covenants, provisions, stipulations or words, or to insert or apply

(p) Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 20. An earlier statute provided that the bona fide payment to and receipt of a person to whom any purchase or mortgage money is payable upon an express or implied trust discharges the person making the payment from seeing to the application or being answerable for the misapplication of the money, unless the contrary is expressly declared by the instrument creating the trust or security. Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 23). Where there are several trustees they must all join in the receipt (Crewe v. Dicken (1798), 4 Ves. 97; Walker v. Symonds (1818), 3 Swan. 1, 63; Hall v. Franck (1849), 11 Bear. 519; Webb v. Ledsam (1855), 1 K. & J. 385; Margot's v. Perks (1864), 12 W. R. 517; Lee v. Sankey (1873), L. any others in place thereof, in any case where the provisions of the Act would allow of their or his doing so (e).

294. Where the instrument creating the trust contains a trust for conversion, the trustee may from time to time agree with a beneficiary absolutely entitled to a share of the trust property for the appropriation of a specific portion thereof as his share (t); and it is his duty to appropriate where the instrument creating the trust declares separate trusts of the several shares (u). After the appropriation, neither portion of the trust property is liable to make good a subsequent depreciation in the other portion (a).

295. A trustee may take legal advice (b) and other expert advice (c).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Power to Employ Agents.

(i.) Powers under Statute.

296. A trustee may appoint a solicitor to be his agent to receive and give a discharge for money or valuable consideration or property receivable by the trustee under the trust by permitting the solicitor to have the custody of and to produce a deed containing such receipt as is referred to in the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (d), s. 56 (e); and a trustee is not chargeable with breach of trust by reason only of his having made or concurred in making any such Powers and Discretions of Trustees.

Appointment of banker or solicitor to receive insurance money.

General powers to appoint agents.

appointment (f); and the production of any such deed by the solicitor has the same validity and effect under that provision as if the person appointing the solicitor had not been a trustee (g).

A trustee may appoint a banker or solicitor to be his agent to receive and give a discharge for money payable to him under a policy of assurance, by permitting the banker or solicitor to have the custody of and produce the policy with a receipt signed by him; and a trustee is not chargeable with a breach of trust by reason only of his having made or concurred in making any such appointment (h).

In neither case, however, is the trustee exempted from any liability which he would have incurred if the Act had not been passed, in case he permits any such money, valuable consideration, or property to remain in the hands or under the control of the banker or solicitor for a period longer than is reasonably necessary to enable the banker or solicitor to pay or transfer it to him (i). These provisions do not authorise a trustee to do anything which he is expressly forbidden to do, or to omit anything which he is expressly directed to do, by the instrument creating the trust (j).

297. Independently of these statutory provisions and of any provisions in the instrument creating the trust (k), a trustee may allow a co-trustee, or employ an accountant, bailiff, banker, broker, solicitor, workman or other agent, to act for him in the affairs of the trust, and to receive and hold trust money and property where he is obliged to do so by common usage, and would if he were a prudent man of business do so in a similar affair of his own (l).

In every case the trustee must select the agent prudently and, in good faith (a), and must employ him only so far as the matter properly lies within his professional capacity or his position as agent (b), and only so long as the matter requires (c).

A trustee cannot, however, divest himself of the trust by employing an agent, and cannot, therefore, entrust the agent with duties to any extent which the agent is willing to undertake, or pay to him any remuneration which he sees fit to demand (d).

Where there are several trustees, the banking account must be in the names of all, and they must not authorise the bank to pay cheques signed by one of their number (Clough v. Bond (1838), 3 My. & Cr. 490, 497, 498; Trutch v. Lamprell (1855), 20 Beav. 116). But a crossed cheque signed by all may be entrusted to one of them for delivery to a beneficiary (Re Lake Bathurst Australasian Gold Mining Co., Bernard v. Bagshaw (1862), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 355, C. Moreover, where a trustee observes the above limitations, he is, as a general rule, chargeable only for money and securities actually received by him, notwithstanding his signing any receipt for the sake of conformity (k), and is accountable only for his own acts, receipts, neglects or defaults, and not for those of any other trustee, or for any banker, broker, or other person with whom any trust moneys or securities may be deposited (l).

Personal contract with agent.

300. A trustee who employs a solicitor, auctioneer, broker, or other agent in connexion with the trust estate enters into a personal contract with him and is personally liable thereon (m). But if the contract is proper, having regard to the character and terms of the trust, the trustee has a right to be indemnified out of the trust estate in respect not merely of payments actually made, but of his liability under it (n). He can, therefore, make any SUB-SECT. 4.—Powers as to Real Estate and Chattels Real.

(i.) Leases.

301. Independently of, but subject to, any provisions in the instrument, if any, creating the trust, it is the duty of the trustee of a landed estate (b) to let the farms upon it from year to year in order to obtain sufficient rent and to keep the farms in a good state of cultivation (c). He may not grant a mining lease (d) or any lease of excessive length (e), or a lease at a premium or in reversion or containing unreasonable provisions (f). A person who holds property on trust cannot concur with the owner of adjoining property in letting the two properties together at one rent (g).

Duty to let and keep in cultivation.

(ii.) Insurance.

302. Where there is no express or implied direction on the subject in the instrument creating the trust, a trustee is not bound to insure buildings on the trust estate against loss or damage by fire (h); but subject to any express prohibition or direction in the instrument creating the trust, he may insure against loss or damage by fire (i) any building or other insurable property which he is not bound forthwith, upon being requested to do so, to convey absolutely to a beneficiary, to any amount, including the amount of any insurance already on foot, not exceeding three-fourths of the full value thereof, and may pay the premiums for such insurance out of the income thereof, or out of the income of any other property subject to the same trust, without obtaining the consent of any person entitled wholly or partly to such income (k).

(iii.) Repairs and Improvements.

Power to repair and improve.

303. The power of a trustee to repair and improve the trust property, and the question whether he is entitled to do so out of capital or income, depend on the terms of the instrument creating the trust (l).

Where the income of leasehold trust property is to be received by the trustee during the life of a beneficiary, he ought to keep the property in repair according to the covenants in the lease and retain sufficient income for the purpose (m).

Where the instrument expressly authorises a trustee to repair and generally to superintend the management of the trust estate (n), or to make such outlay for its improvement as he may think fit, or as may be conducive to its general benefit or to the benefit of the tenants thereof, he has wide powers of effecting repairs and improvements (o). In the absence of any such express authority, Gambles v. McEacharn, [1911] W. N. 23. But where a testator devised a house to trustees upon trust to permit his widow if she pleased to occupy it during her life, and after her death to sell it and divide the proceeds of sale among his children, it was held that the widow while she occupied the house was liable to pay the chief rent and rates and taxes, and to maintain it in such repair as a tenant would be bound to do in the absence of express contract; but that it was the duty of the trustees to keep it sufficiently insured against loss by fire (Kingham v. Kingham, [1897] 1 I. R. 170).

or except where in the case of leasehold property it is required by the covenants in the lease (p), the expenditure by a trustee of trust money on the repair (other than current necessary repair) or improvement of property held in trust for a beneficiary for life and remaindermen is only permissible where it comes within the provisions of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (q), and the amending Acts (r); or where it is in the nature of salvage of the property, or is otherwise evidently as much for the benefit of the remaindermen as of the beneficiary for life (s). In the last-mentioned case such expenditure must generally be defrayed out of the corpus of the property (t), except so far as in the case of leasehold property it is payable out of income (a). A power to keep the trust property in repair and make improvements does not authorise the pulling down of a dilapidated mansion house and the building of a new one (b); and a trustee is not justified in building a villa on the trust estate to improve its value (c), or in making unnecessary improvements or additions to buildings (d).

In the absence of any direction or power in the matter under the terms of the instrument creating the trust, the trustee should apply to the court; and the court will direct the execution of necessary or proper repairs (e) or improvements (f), and in that case may order the cost of them to be charged on or paid out of the capital or income of the property or to be apportioned between the capital and income as the equity of the case may require (g).

304. A trustee may cut down timber on the trust property where it requires to be thinned or has arrived at maturity and would degenerate if left standing, and the court, if applied to, would authorise its being cut down (h).

(v.) *Renewal of Leases.*Renewal of leases.

305. Subject to any express prohibition or direction in the instrument creating the trust, a trustee of leaseholds for lives or years which are renewable from time to time either under a covenant or contract, or by custom or usual practice, may, if he thinks fit, and must, if thereto required by any person having a beneficial interest, present or future or contingent, in the leaseholds, use his best endeavours to obtain from time to time a renewed lease thereof on the accustomed and reasonable terms. Where, however, by the terms of a settlement or will creating the trust the person in possession for his life or other limited interest is entitled to enjoy the leaseholds without any obligation to renew or to contribute to the expense of renewal, the above provision only applies subject to the consent in writing of that person being obtained to the renewal on the part of the trustee. For the purpose of obtaining a renewal a trustee may make or concur in making a surrender of the lease for the time being subsisting and do all other requisite acts (i). If money is required to pay for the renewal, the trustee may pay it out of any money in his hands in trust for the persons beneficially interested in the leaseholds to be comprised in the renewed lease; and if he has not in his hands sufficient money for the purpose, he may raise the required amount by mortgage of the leaseholds to be comprised in the renewed lease or of any other hereditaments for the time being subject to the uses or trusts to which those leaseholds are subject (k).

The enactment does not affect the relative liabilities of beneficiaries for life and in remainder as to the cost of the renewal: and the fines and expenses payable for it ought to be borne by the successive beneficiaries in proportion to their relative enjoyment of the estate as ascertained by an actuarial valuation (Re Baring, Jones v. Baring, [1893] 1 Ch. 61). As to where renewal becomes impossible, see Morris v. Hodges (1860), 27 Beav. 625; Re Wood's Estate (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 572. § 307. 2.

306. A trustee can only mortgage the trust property if and so far as he is authorised by the instrument of trust, or by statute, or by an order of the court (l). Powers and Discretions of Trustees.

Where a trustee is expressly authorised to make outlays out of the income or capital of the trust property in repair or improvements, and has the legal estate in the property, he may mortgage the property in order to raise the necessary sum out of capital (n). Power to mortgage.

307. Where a testator by will charges his real property or a specific portion thereof with payment of his debts or of a legacy or other specific sum of money, and devises the property charged therewith to a trustee for the whole of his estate or interest without making any express provision for the raising thereof out of the property, the trustee has power, notwithstanding any trusts actually declared by the testator, to raise the same by an absolute sale or mortgage of all or any part of the property, or partly by sale and partly by mortgage (n); and a purchaser or mortgagee is not bound to inquire whether the power of sale or mortgage is being duly exercised (o). A trust for sale subsists, in respect of protection to the purchaser, until the land is conveyed to or under the direction of the beneficiaries (Conveyancing Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 37), s. 10 (3)). advantage, and must not offer it for sale in a way calculated to depreciate its value or prejudice the sale (a). He ought to ascertain the estimated value of the property, and, unless he is bound to sell in all events, must not sell at an undervalue (b). If the trust or power is to arise on the death of a beneficiary for life, it cannot be exercised previously even with his concurrence (c). It may subsist, for the purposes of division, after all the beneficiaries have become entitled in possession (d). A trustee having a power or trust for sale cannot give to a lessee or other person an option of purchase for a definite sum at a future date, since, if the property increases in value in the meantime, the trust estate will lose the increment, while if it deteriorates the option will not be exercised (e).

* By statute (f), if and so far as a contrary intention is not expressed in the instrument creating the trust or power, and subject to the provisions of that instrument, a trustee in whom a trust for sale or a power of sale is vested may sell or concur with any other person in selling all or any part of the property either subject to prior charges or not, and either together or in lots (g), and either by

SECT. 2.
Powers and Dispositions of Trustees

Apart from statute, the power of a trustee invested with a power of sale to concur with another person in the sale of trust property jointly with adjacent or other property, or in the sale of a share or interest subject to the trust jointly with the remaining shares or interest in the same property for one entire sum, depends on whether the trust property or share or interest can be so sold advantageously, and whether a proper apportionment of the purchase-money is possible (k). The purchaser is entitled to be satisfied that the sale is not disadvantageous to the trust estate and that the purchase-money has been apportioned (l); and in a proper case the apportionment, in default of agreement, will be made by the court (m). Joint sale apart from statute.

309. On a sale by a trustee a purchaser cannot object to the title on the ground that a condition subject to which the sale was made was unnecessarily depreciatory (a). A beneficiary cannot impeach the sale on that ground unless it also appears that the consideration for the sale was thereby rendered inadequate (b), nor can he do so after the execution of the conveyance, unless it further appears that the purchaser was acting in collusion with the trustee at the time when the contract for the sale was made (c). Sale subject to depreciatory condition.

310. A trustee may sell without excluding the application of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (d), s. 2 (e); and may (f) adopt the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (g). Title on sale.

312. Where there is a trust for sale at the request of beneficiaries for life, and after their death at the discretion of the trustee, the trustee can sell after the death of the beneficiaries for life without the concurrence of the persons beneficially entitled in remainder, notwithstanding that these persons are all of age and sui juris and have now an absolute and immediate interest in the property (i).

Powers as to minerals.

313. Where a trustee or other person (h) is for the time being authorised to dispose of land by way of sale, exchange, partition, or enfranchisement, the High Court may sanction his so disposing of the land with an exception or reservation of any minerals, or with or without rights and powers of or incidental to the working, getting, or carrying away of the minerals, or his so disposing of the minerals with or without such rights or powers, separately from the residue of the land. After having obtained such sanction, he may from time to time, without any further application to the court, so dispose of any such land or minerals, unless he is forbidden to do so by the instrument creating the trust or direction (l).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Retainer against Beneficiaries.

Retainer as against beneficiaries.

In spite of the generality of the language, these enactments only apply to persons claiming to act under an instrument creating a trust or power, and are not applicable to an executor realising an estate for the benefit of creditors (Re Cavendish and Arnold's Contract, [1912] W. N. 83). Nothing in the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 44, derogates from any power which a trustee may have under the Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), and the amending Acts, or otherwise (Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 44 (3)). The trustees cannot, however, so retain money which comes into their hands as such trustees incidentally, and not as part of the trust property (a). 316. In the case of trusts constituted, or created by instruments coming into operation before, the 1st January, 1882, a bare power given to two or more trustees in whom no estate is vested cannot be exercised by the survivor or survivors unless an intention to that effect is shown by the instrument creating the trust (c). It makes no difference that his interest in the trust estate is derivative (Jacobs v. Rylands, supra; Doering v. Doering, supra), and the principle applies in the case of the assign of a beneficiary who is also a trustee and has committed a breach of trust (Morris v. Livie (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 380). But it does not apply where the breach of trust is committed in respect of another fund (*Re Towndrow, Gratton v. SECT. 2. vested may be exercised by the survivor (d), unless a contrary Powers and intention is indicated by the creator of the trust (e).

Discretions of Trustees. In the case of trusts constituted or created by instruments coming into operation after the 31st December, 1881, any power or trust given to two or more trustees may be exercised or performed by the survivor or survivors unless a contrary intention is expressed in the instrument creating the trust (f). The contrary intention must be clearly expressed, and is not indicated by the fact that a wide personal discretion is vested in the trustees (g).

Devolution.

317. Every new trustee appointed either under the statutory power (h) or by a court of competent jurisdiction has the same powers, authorities, and discretions as if he had originally been appointed trustee by the instrument, if any, creating the trust, unless a contrary intention is expressed in such instrument (i). New trustees appointed under a power in the trust instrument are often expressly invested with the powers of the original trustees. When this is not so, the principle applicable is that primâ facie powers given to trustees are incident to their office and pass to the holders of the office for the time being in the absence of a contrary intention expressed in clear language (k). Apart from statute, on the death of a sole or last surviving trustee the trusts and powers vested in him can only be executed by some person pointed out by the creator of the trust as a proper person for that purpose (l). SUB-SECT. 7.—Lunacy of Trustee.

318. Where a power is vested in a lunatic in the character of a trustee, or the consent of a lunatic to the exercise of a power is necessary in that character, the committee of his estate, in his name and on his behalf, may, under an order of the judge in Lunacy, if such judge thinks it expedient, made on the application of any person interested, exercise the power or give the consent in such manner as the order directs (s).

319. A trustee must not use the powers which the possession of the legal estate in the trust property confers on him in law except in a proper way for the legitimate purposes of the trust (t), and if he is about to do so he may be restrained by injunction (a). In exercising or refraining from the exercise of any power he must act honestly (b), and must not benefit one cestui que trust at the expense

SECT. 2. of another (c), except so far as the exercise of a discretion expressly permitted to him by the instrument creating the trust necessarily involves that result (d). If the trustee has only a limited estate or interest in the trust property he cannot exercise the power in such a manner as to prejudice the rights of a legal remainderman (e).

320. A trustee cannot exercise a discretionary power in reference to a trust fund which has been paid into court (f).

321. Where a trust is being administered by the court (g), the trustee may, with the sanction of the court (h), exercise discretionary powers with respect to it (i); but he cannot act without such sanction (k), and the court will in a proper case control the exercise of his discretion (l).

SUB-SECT. 9.—Disclaimer of Powers.

322. A trustee or other person to whom a power is given, whether coupled with an interest or not, may, by deed, disclaim the power, and, after the disclaimer, is not capable of exercising or joining in the exercise of the power (m). After the disclaimer, the power may be exercised by the other or others, if any, of the persons to whom the power is given, or the survivor or survivors of those others, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument creating the power (n). This power of disclaimer does not, however, enable a trustee to get rid of part of the trusts imposed on him (o).

Reimbursement and indemnity.

323. Where a trustee has properly (p) paid or incurred expenses or liabilities in performing a trust, or in respect of the trust property, he is entitled to reimbursement or indemnity in respect thereof out of the trust property (q), or from a person sui juris who is beneficially entitled thereto (r). His right extends to calls on shares which he has been obliged to pay (s) and to liabilities incurred by him in properly carrying on a trade or business under the provisions of the instrument creating the trust (t), and to damages and costs recovered against him as legal owner of the trust estate, where the injury in respect of which they were recovered was not caused by his neglect or default (u). As between the beneficiaries, a trustee's costs and expenses are generally recoverable out of capital (a); and the trustee has a lien for them on both the capital and the income of the trust property in priority to the claims of beneficiaries and persons claiming under them (b). If, however, he has committed a breach of trust, he cannot recover them until he has made good the breach (c). Similarly, where the trustee has either mixed his own money with the trust fund (d) or expended his own money together with trust money in the purchase or improvement of property (e), the beneficiaries have a first claim in respect of the trust fund, and the trustee has only a subsequent claim in respect of his own money.

Costs incurred in reference to appointment.

324. A trustee is entitled to be reimbursed out of the trust estate the costs which he has incurred previously to his appointment in obtaining a statement of the trust property and ascertaining that he is being duly appointed (f) and the costs incidental to the appointment (g), and also the costs of former trustees paid by him to their personal representatives on obtaining a transfer of the trust property to himself (h).

Money expended in preserving trust
property.

325. A trustee has a right to a lien on the trust property and to an indemnity thereout for money expended by him in its preservation (i); and a person who at his request advances money for its preservation obtains a similar right by subrogation (k).

Rutland* (1882), 46 L. T. 848). Counsel's opinion does not always and necessarily justify a trustee in bringing or defending an action (Devey v. Phillips (1740), 2 Atk. 48; Irwin v. Rogers (1848), 12 I. Eq. R. 159). In proceedings in which trustees are merely neutral, they are liable, if they appear on an appeal by separate counsel, to be refused their costs (Carroll v. Graham, [1905] 1 Ch. 478, C. A.; Re Barry's Trusts, Barry v. Smart, [1906] 2 Ch. 358, C. A.; but see Catterson v. Clark (1906), 95 L. T. 42, C. A.). A trustee ought, in a proper case, to join with the cestui que trust in instituting proceedings if requested to do so, instead of being made a defendant thereto (Beale v. Sparkes (1827), 1 Mol. 8). Trustees who appeared in proceedings between beneficiaries without having been served were not allowed their costs (Bennett v. Biddles (1846), 10 Jur. 534).

Misconduct of trustees.

Action for account or administration.

332. Where a cestui que trust brings an action against the trustee for an account or for the administration of the trust estate, the trustee bears his own costs if and so far as the proceedings have been occasioned by his neglect or default (b), and may be ordered to pay the costs of the cestui que trust (c). On the other hand, the trustee is allowed his costs out of the trust estate, or the cestui que trust's share of it, if his conduct has been honest and correct (d), even though it may have been mistaken (e); and the cestui que trust or his solicitor may be ordered to bear the costs of the proceedings personally, if they have been commenced wrongfully or too hastily (f). Where the action was necessary independently of a breach of trust committed by the trustee, he is liable to pay the special costs attributable to the breach of trust, but may be allowed his general costs of the action (g) after he has made good the loss occasioned by the breach (h).

property is in another country in which he is allowed remuneration by the local law (d), a trustee is not entitled to a salary (e), or compensation for personal trouble and loss of time (f).

SECT. 3.
Rights of Trustees.

336. The disability to receive remuneration exists even where the trustee acts as a solicitor or in some other professional capacity (g), or where he carries on or transacts a trade or business in connexion with and for the benefit of the trust (h); and it extends to the firm of the professional trustee and to his partners individually (i), that he will not act unless the cestui que trust will give him a remuneration not contemplated by the terms of the trust, and the cestui que trust contracts that he shall have it, the transaction may be upheld (Ayliffe v. Murray (1740), 2 Atk. 58). But a bargain of this kind ought to be discouraged; and the remuneration was disallowed where the trustee died before he had completely performed the trust (Gould v. Fleetwood (1732), 3 P. Wms. 251, note (a)). A trustee who has accepted the office without any stipulation on the subject cannot afterwards refuse to continue to act unless he is remunerated, even though, by performing his duties, he has greatly benefited the cestui que trust (Bainbrigg v. Blair (1845), 8 Beav. 588, 596; Barrett v. Hartley (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 789, per STUART, V.-C., at p. 796).

The fact that the trustee has benefited the trust property to the prejudice of his own affairs cannot be taken into consideration (Robinson v. Pett, supra). He cannot charge or take a commission or other remuneration for performing any duty in connexion with the trust unless he is specially authorised to do so by the instrument creating the trust (Arnold v. Garner (1847), 2 Ph. 231, C. A., per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 235; Nicholson v. Tutin (No. 2) (1857), 3 K. & J. 159); as to a trustee who is an auctioneer, see *Matthews v. As to the right of a constructive trustee to remuneration in some cases, see p. 165, post. A director of a company who holds his qualification shares as trustee for another company is not accountable to that company for his director's fees (Re Dover Coalfield Extension, Ltd., [1908] 1 Ch. 65, C. unless the trustee arranges that the partner employed shall alone be entitled to the remuneration (k). The rule also extends to executors and to trustees of implied trusts (l). It does not, however, apply to the costs of a solicitor-trustee acting in legal proceedings for himself and his co-trustees jointly, or for himself and his cestui que trust (m), or where he acts separately for a person to whom trust money is lent on mortgage (n), or as between him and a stranger who unsuccessfully brings an adverse action against the trust (o).

Express
declaration as to remuneration.

337. The creator of a trust may, however, expressly declare that a trustee who is a solicitor or acts in some other professional character shall receive his usual professional remuneration for so acting (a). Such a declaration in a will amounts to a legacy to the trustee; it is, therefore, void if he is an attesting witness to the will (b), and does not take effect if the testator's estate is insolvent (c), though it operates notwithstanding the bequest of a legacy to the trustee conditionally upon his accepting the trust (d). The declaration does not authorise charges for services not strictly professional (e) unless expressly so worded (f).

Amount of remuneration

338. The trustees, unless specially authorised to do so, cannot bind the beneficiaries as to the amount of the remuneration to be paid to a solicitor-trustee, or to an independent solicitor (g), and a forming part of the trust estate, the firm is not accountable to the trust estate for fees received by him for manorial business and brought into the partnership accounts, since they were received by him as steward and not as a solicitor (*Re Corsellis, Lawton v. SECT. 3.

Rights of

SUB-SECT. 5.—Protection of the Court.

340. Where a trustee is in doubt as to his right course of action, he is entitled to take the opinion of the court (k); and, generally, a trustee is entitled to the reasonable protection and direction of a court of equity in the exercise of his trust (l). If, however, he obstinately, capriciously, or unreasonably refuses to act without that protection, he will be ordered to pay the costs of the proceedings for obtaining it (m). The decision of a court of first instance completely protects and indemnifies him in respect of what he does in accordance with it (n). If he appeals from it to a higher tribunal, he does so at his own risk (o); and, if he fails, he will be ordered to pay the costs of the appeal (p).

341. As a trustee is not entitled to remuneration for his services (q), so a gift to him from a cestui que trust is liable to be set aside (r), especially if it is made out of or with respect to the capital or income of the trust property (s). Such a gift may, however, stand if the trustee can prove that he has placed himself in exactly the same position as a stranger would have been in, and that he has taken no advantage of his influence or knowledge, or of his relation to the cestui que trust, beyond what may be the natural and unavoidable consequence of kindness arising out of that relation, and that he has put the cestui que trust on his guard, and has brought everything to the knowledge of the cestui que trust which he himself knew (t).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Bargains with Beneficiaries.

Bargains.

342. A bargain or arrangement between a trustee and a cestui que trust with reference to the trust property, by which the interest of the cestui que trust therein is in any way prejudiced, is liable to be set aside, unless it can be shown that the cestui que trust, in concurring in it, was fully aware of all the circumstances of the case, and had not been subjected to any pressure or undue influence (a).

It is almost impossible that, where the relation of trustee and cestui que trust exists, a transaction purporting to be a bounty for the execution of antecedent duty can stand, however moral and creditable the action may be (Hatch v. Hatch (1804), 9 Ves. 292, per Lord ELDON, L.C., at pp. 296, 297). A cestui que trust cannot give a benefit to a trustee (Vaughton v. Noble (1861), 30 Beav. 34, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 39, and see title FRAUDULENT AND VOIDABLE CONVEYANCES, Vol. XV., pp. 109, 110). A gift from a cestui que trust to a trustee, even where the parties are in the relation of wife and husband, can only be supported by very strong and clear evidence (Re Blake, Blake v. Power (1889), 37 W. R. 441, per KAY, J., at p. 442).

No one standing in a fiduciary relation to a person can retain a gift made to him by that person if the donor impeaches the gift within a reasonable time, unless the donee can prove that the donor had independent advice, or that the fiduciary relation had ceased for so long that the donor was under no control or influence whatever (Powell v. Powell, [1900] 1 Ch. 243, per FARWELL, J., at p. 245).

Forwood*, [1901] 1 Ch. 746, C. A., per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS L.J., at pp. 760, 761. The transaction, in order to be impeachable, must be connected with the trust (Knight v. Marjoribanks (1849), 2 Mac. & G. 10, C. A.), and the rule does not extend to dealings between a mortgagee and mortgagor (ibid.). A dealing of a trustee with a cestui que trust may be upheld if it is fair in all respects and no advantage has been taken of the cestui que trust, and it is clear that he knew his rights and that the facts were correctly represented to him (Luther v. Bianconi (1860), 10 L. Ch. R. 194, per BRADY, L.C., at p. 200).

Where, however, the terms of the trust authorise the raising of money on the security of trust property, one of several trustees may lend money on a mortgage thereof by the trustees, and may exercise the powers of a mortgagee over it adversely to the trust (b).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Purchases by Trustees.

343. Except under an express authority contained in the instrument creating the trust or under an order of a court of competent jurisdiction (c), a person who is invested with a trust or power to sell property cannot purchase it from himself, since he cannot at the same time occupy the two positions of vendor and purchaser (d); and one of several such persons cannot purchase it from the others (e). If such a person desires to purchase such property he must first be discharged from his trusteeship (f); and even then, in order that the transaction may be unimpeachable, it must be clear that, in purchasing it, he is not taking an advantage of knowledge which he has acquired in respect of it during his trusteeship (g). Nor can he sell the property to himself jointly with others, or to a trustee for himself (h), or to another person with a view to its resale to himself (i), though if the sale is in all respects bonâ fide he may sell to the trustees of his marriage settlement (k) or to a joint stock company in which he is a shareholder (l). independent person under the trust for sale, he cannot repurchase it for himself, so long as the contract for sale to that person remains executory, and he has power either to enforce it or to rescind or alter it (m). A subsequent repurchase by the trustee after a bona fide sale to a third party and the lapse of a considerable period will not, however, be set aside on the ground that when he sold the property he hoped to repurchase it for himself at some future time (n). Moreover, subject to the same principles as regulate purchases by other trustees from their cestui que trust (o), he may purchase the beneficial interest of a cestui que trust in property which he holds on trust for sale (p), and may purchase the property itself where the cestui que trust has assumed the conduct of the sale and arranges for the purchase (q), or where the cestui que trust urges the purchase on the trustee (r) or agrees to it (s).

no absolute rule against his purchasing the trust property from his cestui que trust (b), and if he purchases the whole of it the relation between them is terminated (c). Such a transaction is always regarded by courts of equity with the utmost jealousy (d), and in order that it may stand, if it is impeached within a reasonable time by the cestui que trust or a person claiming through him (e), the trustee must show (1) that there has been no fraud or concealment his active duties in respect of the property and has become a bare trustee (see p. 80, ante) in relation to it (Ex parte Bennett (1805), 10 Ves. 381); but it does not extend to a trustee who has had no active duties in connexion with the property, such as a trustee to preserve contingent remainders (Pooley v. Quiller (1858), 4 Drow. 184, per KINDERSLEY, V.-C., at p. 489), or a person who was named as a trustee but who disclaimed or never acted (Stacey v. Elph (1833), 1 My. & K. 195; Mackintosh v. Barber (1822), 1 Bing. 50; Clark v. Clark (1844), 9 App. Cas. 733, P. C.); see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 298. (c) Gibson v. Jeyes, supra, at pp. 271, 277; Morse v. Royal, supra, per Lord ERSKINE, L.C., at p. 373. In purchases by a trustee from his cestui que trust an act is done which, though open to inquiry, puts an end in form to the relation between them. If the purchase stands, he is no longer a trustee, since the cestui que trust has permitted him to become the beneficial owner (Chalmer v. Bradley (1819), 1 Jac. & W. 51, per PLUMER, M.R., at p. 68).

(d) Morse v. Royal, supra, at p. 372; Watson v. Toone (1820), Madd. & G. 153. The mischiefs of a purchase by a trustee from his cestui que trust are great (Chalmer v. Bradley, supra, at p. 68). The same principle applies to constructive trustees or trustees de son tort (Plowright v. Lambert, supra), and to solicitors and agents and other persons in a fiduciary position to the vendor (Gibson v. Jeyes, supra; Holman v. Loynes (1854), 4 De G. M. & G. 270, C. A.; Spencer v. Topham (1856), 22 Beav. 573; Johnson v. Fesemeyer (1858), 3 De G. & J. 13; Tale v. Williamson (1866), 2 Ch. App. 55; Cockburn v. Edwards (1881), 18 Ch. D. 449, C. A., per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 455; Luddy's Trustee v. Peard (1886), 33 Ch. D. 500; Barron v. Wilks, [1900] 2 Ch. 121, C. A.), including counsel in relation to their clients (Carter v. Palmer (1842), 8 Cl. & Fin. 657, H. L.); but purchases by them will be upheld if the vendor is separately advised and fully cognisant of the circumstances (Edwards v. Meyrick (1842), 2 Haro, 60, 68 et seq.; Holman v. Loynes, supra, at pp. 281 et seq.; Barnard v. Hunter (1856), 5 W. R. 92). The principle does not apply to purchases by a mortgagee from a mortgagor (Knight v. Marjoribanks, supra), or by a partner from the representatives of a deceased partner (Chambers v. Howell (1847), 11 Beav. 6; Knox v. Gye (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 656, per Lord WESTBURY, at p. 675).

or advantage taken by him of information acquired by him in the character of trustee (f); (2) that the cestui que trust had independent advice (g), and every kind of protection (h), and the fullest information with respect to the property (i); and (3) that the consideration was adequate (k).

346. A purchase by a trustee is set aside against a subsequent purchaser from him with notice (l). A purchase by a trustee is not set aside by a court of equity, however, if there has been delay or acquiescence on the part of the cestui que trust or subsequent dealings by him on the footing of its having taken place (m). Where it is set aside at the instance of the cestui que trust, the property will be ordered to be reconveyed to him in consideration of the payment by him of the price at which the trustee bought, with interest thereon at 4 per cent.; while, on the other hand, the trustee, or any purchaser from the trustee with notice, accounts for the rents and profits since the purchase by the trustee, but without interest thereon, or, if he has been in actual possession, is charged with an occupation rent (n). The trustee will be entitled, in addition to his purchase-money, to an allowance with interest for improvements and repairs made by him which are substantial and lasting (o), or tend to enhance the price of the property on a resale (p); and, on the other hand, if he has done anything to deteriorate its value, the amount of the deterioration will be deducted from what he receives (q).

The cestui que trust may, in the alternative, require the property to be resold (r). In this case it is put up at a sum representing Proceedings do not abate on a change of trustees, and a trustee may be made a party in lieu of an absolute owner to whose interest he has succeeded (R. S. C., Ord. 17, rr. 1, 3). A person claiming adversely to a trust should not be made a party to a suit for its execution (A. G. v. Avon, otherwise Aberavon Corporation (1863), 3 De G. J. & Sm. 637, C. A.). As between the trustee and the third parties, the costs of litigation are not affected by the existence of the trust, but follow the ordinary rules (Brodie v. St. Paul (1791), 1 Ves. 326; Edward v. Harvey (1810), Coop. G. 40). Trustees suing on behalf of their cestuis que trust are not required to give security for costs, as nominal plaintiffs, in case of their poverty (White v. Butt, [1909] 1 K. B. 50, C. A.). In certain cases cestuis que trust, though unnecessary, may not be improper parties (Merry v. Pownall, [1898] 1 Ch. 306, per KEKEWICH, J., at p. 312). Where cestuis que trust ought not to have been parties to an action, their costs are not allowed (Re Cooper, Cooper v. Vesey (1882), 20 Ch. D. 611, C. A.). As to the duty of trustees in reference to instituting and defending actions and their power to compromise, see pp. 118, 140, ante; as to interpleader by or against trustees, see title INTERPLEADER, Vol. XVII., pp. 587, 591, 595, 596, 136, 614.

Where a person by fraud obtains a deed whereby another covenants to pay him an annual sum of money in trust for a third party, the fraud is a defence to an action on the covenant, although the cestui que trust is not shown to have been privy to it (Evans v. Edmonds, supra). But a defence which would be good against an action by a cestui que trust is not necessarily available against an action by his trustees (Britten v. Perrott (1834), 2 Cr. & M. 597; May v. Taylor (1843), 6 Man. & G. 261; *Re Hayward, Tweedie v. The trustee is entitled to deduct and retain the costs and expenses of the lodgment of the fund before lodging it in court, and any question as to the propriety of his doing so must be challenged by a separate proceeding (Re Parker's Will (1888), 39 Ch. into court.

Ch. 350, C. A. Payment into court is justified where a beneficiary has incurred his interest in the trust property and there is a question as to the amount due to the incumbrancer (Hockey v. Western, supra). The fact of the person entitled being a married woman does not of itself justify payment of the fund into court (Re Waring (1852), 16 Jur. 632; Re Roberts's Trusts (1869), 38 L. J. (CH.) 708; but see Le Swan (1864), 2 Hem. & M. 34). Where there was a doubt whether money held in trust for a married woman had been agreed to be settled, the trustee was held to be justified in paying it into court instead of paying it to her and her husband (Re Bendyshe (1857), 3 Jur. (N. S.) 727).

A trustee cannot pay money into court merely to get rid of the liability of a trust which he has undertaken to perform (Re Knight's Trusts, supra, per ROMILLY, M.R., at p. 49; Re Elliot's Trusts (1873), L. R. 15 Eq. 194), or because he cannot get a release from trustees who are entitled to receive it from him (Re Cater's Trusts (No. 2) (1858), 25 Beav. 366), or a release from the persons beneficially interested when there are executors who have a legal right to receive the money (Re Hoskin's Trusts (1877), 5 Ch. Inland Revenue certificate respecting the legacy or residue (o). In all other cases the trustee must make and file an affidavit stating briefly (1) the trust and the instrument creating it; (2) to the best of his belief, the names and addresses of the persons interested in the fund (8); his submission to answer inquiries respecting its application; and (4) his address for service of any proceeding in relation thereto; and he must also give notice of the lodgment to the persons named in his affidavit as interested therein (p).

of court.

361. Payment out of court is obtained on petition or summons by a person who proves his title to the fund (q). The petition or summons is served on such persons as the court or judge directs (r), including in most cases the trustee who lodged the fund in court, and whose duty it is to appear and protect the fund (s). The trustee is not, however, served where the lodgment is made without an affidavit (t), and he need not be served where in his affidavit he has stated that a named person, then an infant, was absolutely entitled to the fund (u), or where the portion of the fund sought to be paid out has been carried to the separate account of a named person (a). Where a fund has been lodged in court to the credit of infants as the next of kin of a person then supposed to have died

A person entitled to a definite share in the fund may apply, independently of the other beneficiaries, for payment out of that share (Re Belford's Will (1853), 21 L. T. (o. s.) 164; Re Hawke's Trust (1854), 18 Jur. 33; Winkworth v. Winkworth (1863), 32 Beav. 233; Re Tracey's Trusts (1872), 6 L. R. Eq. 271). An applicant may be allowed his costs, although his claim fails (Re Birch's Legacy under Bissell's Will (1856), 2 K. & J. 309; compare Ex parte Stevens (1848), 2 Ph. 772, per Lord COTTENHAM, L.C., at p. 774). The fund will be distributed on the application of the trustee (Re Cooper's Legacy Trusts, Ex parte Sparks (1853), 4 De G. M. & G. 757, C.A.; Re Trower's Trust (1859), 1 L. 362. An order may be made for payment of the income of the fund to a person entitled thereto, while the fund itself is retained in court (c).

363. Payment into court by a trustee does not discharge him from his office (d), or relieve him from liability to account for trust money misapplied or not applied by him (e), or from liability to be sued in respect of any other breach of trust (f). He thereby expresses that he desires to be discharged within the meaning of a power authorising the appointment of a new trustee in that event (g); and he is no longer able to exercise any powers or discretions previously vested in him over or in reference to the trust property (h).

Where, under the terms of the trust, trustees had a discretion as to the mode of applying the capital and income of the trust fund for the benefit of the cestui que trust, it was held that payment of the fund into court put an end to their discretion but that the court could deal with the fund in the way that it considered best in his interest; and on his application the fund was ordered to be paid out to the trustees of a proper settlement executed by him (Re Murphy's Trusts, [1900] 1 L. The court does not, however, interfere, (1) to enforce the exercise of a power by the trustee where he has been given an absolute discretion respecting it and he is not exercising that discretion wrongly or unreasonably (q), or (2) to control his action or discretion in any other way, unless he acts improperly (r), or (3) where the proceedings for obtaining administration by the court are vexatiously or unnecessarily instituted (s).

Trefusis*, supra, per JAMES, L.J., at pp. 366, 367). In a proper case the court authorises trustees to expend money out of an unincumbered portion of trust property on the repair of a portion of the property which is in mortgage (*Re Hotchkys, Freke v. SECT. 8

Administration by the Court

Procedure for obtaining intervention of court; and costs of parties.

367. The intervention of the court is obtained by an action (g) or, in suitable cases, by an originating summons (h). Any trustee or cestui que trust has a right to seek or require the intervention of the court (i); but he may be refused his costs, or may be condemned to pay the costs of the proceedings, if he does so vexatiously or needlessly, or if he vexatiously or needlessly renders their institution necessary (k). The creator of the trust may, by appropriate

839. The existence of a discretionary power in the trustee is not a bar to an order for the payment of the trust fund into court, but the circumstance that such a power is on the point of being exercised may cause the court to refrain from directing such payment (Talbot v. Marshfield (1864), 2 Drew. & Sm. 285). Payment into court will not be ordered where the fund will be sufficiently protected by a distringas (Ross v. Ross (1849), 12 Beav. 89).

(g) Borthwick v. Ransford (1884), 28 Ch. D. 79. In proceedings against trustees for wilful default accounts will be directed against them on that footing on proof of a single instance of wilful default and at any stage of the proceedings (Shepherd v. Towgood (1823), Turn. & R. 379; Garrett v. Noble (1834), 6 Sim. 504; Booth v. Purser (1838), 1 I. Eq. R. 33; Green v. Badley (1844), 7 Beav. 274; Coope v. Carter, *Coope v. A.; Re Anstice, Anstice v. Hibbell (1885), 54 L. J. (CH.) 1104; Re Barclay, Barclay v. Andrew, [1899] 1 Ch. 674. But this rule does not apply to cases of active breach of trust, in which relief is only given in respect of those specific breaches of trust which are alleged and proved (Re Wrightson, Wrightson v. Cooke, [1908] 1 Ch. 789). Accounts on the footing of wilful default cannot be obtained on an originating summons (Re Hengler, Frowde v. Hengler, [1893] W. N. 37; Dowse v. Gorton, [1891] A. C. 190, 202; Re Newland, Bush v. Summers, [1904] W. N. 181). 368. Where in an action the court is satisfied that diligent search has been made for any person who, in the character of a trustee, is made a defendant in order to serve him with a process of the court and that he cannot be found, the court may hear and determine the action and give judgment therein against him in his character of a trustee as if he had been duly served, or had entered an appearance in the action, and had also appeared by his counsel and solicitor at the hearing, but without prejudice to any interest he may have in the matters in question in the action in any other character (m).

Where a beneficiary institutes proceedings against a surviving trustee for a general account and administration of the trust, the representative of a deceased trustee is not generally a necessary party (n). Where all the trustees are dead, an action for breach of trust and the recovery of trust property cannot be brought against the representatives of one who was not the last surviving trustee, unless the trust estate is represented by adding as co-defendants either the representatives of the last surviving trustee, or new trustees after they have been duly appointed (o).

A trustee who at the request of one beneficiary neglects to sell the trust property when it can be sold advantageously, and afterwards sells it at a reduced price, is liable to make good the loss to the trust estate (Taylor v. Tabrum, supra; Fry v. Fry (1859), 27 Beav. 144; compare Re Evans Jones v. Evans, [1913] 1 Ch. 23, 35).

(c) Adair v. Shaw, supra, at p. 272. It is a breach of trust, notwithstanding that the trust was voluntarily created by the trustee himself without any valuable consideration (Drosier v. Brereton (1851), 15 Beav. 221, 225, 226), and notwithstanding that the trustee derives no personal advantage from it (Adair v. Shaw, supra, at p. 272; Montford (Lord) v. Cadogan (Lord), supra, at p. 489). The fact of the trustee being remunerated for his services does not generally increase his liability (Jobson v. Palmer, [1893] 1 Ch. 71, per ROMER, J., at p. 76), but may in some circumstances do so (National Trustees Co. of Australasia v. General Finance Co. of Australasia, [1905] A. C. 373, 381, P. C.). As to breaches of trust in case of public and charitable trusts, see title CHARITIES, Vol. IV., pp. 271, 272, 276, 277, 330; as to breaches of official trust under the Official Secrets Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, s. 28), see titles CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., p. 32; CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX. pp. 480, 481.

such breach of trust entails a loss on the trust estate, the trustee, and, after his decease or bankruptcy, the trustee's estate, are, as a general rule, liable (d). A trustee may, however, be relieved from such liability by the provisions of the instrument creating the trust (e) or by statute (f), or by the fact that the breach of trust has been occasioned by necessity or some other adequate cause (g), or has been authorised or condoned by the cestui que trust injured thereby (h), or has been due to an innocent mistake (i). A mere error of judgment does not in itself constitute a breach of trust (k); and a trustee is presumed to have dealt honestly and properly with the trust estate until the contrary is shown (l).

SECT. 1. with a view to or with knowledge of an intended breach of Liability of trust (p).
Trustees.

Married woman.

374. The respective liabilities of husband and wife for a breach of trust committed by the wife depend on the general law as to wrongs committed by a married woman (q). Where a husband is liable for his wife's breaches of trust, the liability extends to the case of a negative breach of trust by negligence as well as to a breach of trust by active misconduct (r).

Bare trustee.

375. Where a bare legal estate in property is vested in a person in trust for an equitable trustee who is interested in it upon trust for beneficiaries, if the bare trustee so deals with the legal estate as to sanction an act done by the equitable trustee to the prejudice of the beneficiaries, he thereby becomes a party to the breach of trust and is answerable accordingly (s). Where the equitable trust is for the purpose of sale, the bare trustee is, in the interests of the beneficiaries, bound to convey it to the equitable trustee to enable him to execute his trust. If, however, in parting with it he goes beyond the mere purpose of conveying it to the equitable trustee and so deals with it as to facilitate a breach of trust by the equitable trustee, he is deemed a party to the breach of trust and is responsible for it (t).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Nature of Liability.

(i.) Civil Liability.

Nature of liability.

376. A breach of trust in itself is merely a violation of an equitable obligation; the remedy for it, therefore, lies in equity only and must be sought in a court of equitable jurisdiction (a). A breach of trust is, in equity, regarded as giving rise to a simple contract debt (b), unless the trustee has covenanted under his seal(c) that he will perform the trust, in which case his breach of trust, being also a breach of covenant, gives rise to a specialty debt (d). Such a covenant may be created by an instrument under his seal (c) containing an express agreement that he will perform the trust (f), or a declaration to that effect (g), or may be raised by necessary implication from such an instrument (h). The mere fact of his accepting the trust by a deed under his seal does not, however, constitute a covenant by him to carry the trust into effect (i).

Liability of Trustees.

377. Where a trustee who is also a beneficiary commits a breach of trust, his beneficial interest in the trust property is liable to make good the loss occasioned thereby (k). Trustee-beneficiary.

378. Where several trustees are implicated in a breach of trust, there is no primary liability for it between them, but they are all jointly and severally liable to a person who is entitled to sue in respect of it (l). Where a breach of trust has been committed for Several trustees.

379. A solicitor who as a trustee commits a fraudulent breach of trust is liable to be struck off the rolls on the application of a cestui que trust (q).

No set-off in breaches of trust.

380. Where a trustee is liable in respect of distinct breaches of trust, one of which has resulted in a loss and the other in a gain, he is not entitled to set off the gain against the loss, but is liable for the whole loss occasioned by the one breach, while the estate is entitled to the whole gain realised by the other (r).

SECT. 1.

Liability of Trustees.

Criminal liability for breach of trust.

381. A trustee of any property, who with intent to defraud converts or appropriates or disposes of or destroys any part of it, is guilty of a misdemeanour and punishable with penal servitude or imprisonment (s). No prosecution for the offence may be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General (t); and no person who has taken civil proceedings against the trustee may prosecute him without the sanction of the court or judge before whom such proceedings were taken or are pending (a); nor may the trustee be prosecuted after having compulsorily disclosed the offence on oath in legal proceedings bonâ fide instituted by a party aggrieved or on an examination in bankruptcy (b). The criminal liability of the trustee, and any proceedings, conviction, or judgment in respect of it, do not affect the right of any party aggrieved to his remedy at law or in equity nor in any way prejudice an agreement entered into or security given by the trustee with a view to the restoration or repayment of the trust property (c).

382. A trustee who is ordered by the High Court to pay a sum of money in his possession or under his control, and who makes default in doing so, is liable to attachment and imprisonment (d).

Default in obeying order for payment.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Extent of Liability.(i.) Restoration of Trust Property.

383. The extent of the liability incurred by a trustee who is responsible for a breach of trust is measured by the extent of the loss or depreciation which his act or omission has caused to the trust estate; and he is liable to restore to the estate the property which it has thereby lost or its value, and to make good any depreciation and damage which the estate has thereby suffered (e).

SECT. 1.

Liability of Trustees.

Improper investment.

Neglect to invest.

384. Where a trustee improperly sells out stock and invests in land, he must replace the stock, and if the land realises more than is required for doing so the excess belongs to the trust estate (f). A trustee, however, is never charged with imaginary values (g), and where there is no loss there is no liability (h). If, therefore, he improperly invests trust money on an insufficient security which is realised at a loss and the proceeds are invested in stock, which is subsequently sold at a profit, he is entitled to the benefit of the profit towards discharge of his liability (i).

Where a trustee is directed to invest trust money in a particular stock or security and neglects to do so, he may at the option of the cestui que trust be charged either with the principal sum which he has retained uninvested and interest thereon (k), or with the amount of the stock or security which could have been purchased when he ought to have made the investment, and the dividends which would have accrued thereon (l). This option does not exist where the Carruthers* (1912), 133 L. T. Jo. 589. The liability is not limited to what the trustee who is charged has actually received, and still less to any benefit which he may have personally derived from the breach (Adair v. Shaw (1803), 1 Sch. & Lef. 243, per Lord REDFORD, L.C., at p. 272). Where a trustee mixes trust moneys with his own he is charged with the whole amount except what he can prove to be his own (Lupton v. White, White v. Lupton (1808), 15 Ves. 432; Cook v. Addison (1869), L. R. 7 Eq. 466, per STUART, V.-C., at p. 470; Re Oatway, Hertslet v. Oatway, [1903] 2 Ch. 356; and see pp. 208, 209, post). Where a trustee incautiously invests trust money on a security authorised by the terms of the trust but of insufficient value, he is liable for the deficiency on a realisation of the security (Re Salmon, Priest v. Uppleby (1889), 42 Ch. D. 351, C. A.). The court does not assent to any compromise which does not replace the whole of the trust money, where the trustee is able to pay it (Re Dewar, Dewar v. Brooke (1885), 54 L. J. (CH.) 830, per KAT, J., at p. 833).

(h) Re Deane, Bridger v. Deane, supra, per Lord ESHER, M.R., at p. 19. The fact that a higher interest than would have been produced by authorised investments has been paid to a beneficiary for life from an unauthorised investment of trust money does not render the trustee liable to recoup the difference to the capital of the trust estate where he restores the principal sum in full (Stroud v. Gwyer (1860), 28 Beav. 130; Re Appleby, Walker v. Leaver, Walker v. Nisbet, [1903] 1 Ch. 565, C. A.; Slade v. Chaine, [1908] 1 Ch. 522, C. A.; Re Hoyle, Row v. Jagg (No. 2), [1912] 1 Ch. 67).

(i) Fletcher v. Green (1864), 33 Beav. 426; see Winchelsea (Earl) v. Norcliffe (1687), 1 Vern. 434. Where a trust estate, consisting in part of new shares in a company liable to calls and allotted in respect of original shares forming part of the estate, was lost through default of the trustee, he was held liable to make good the value of the estate less the amount of the calls on the new shares which had in fact been paid by him (Briggs v. Massey (1882), 51 L. J. (CH.) 447, C. A.).

trustee has an alternative power to invest in real security, since if he had done so the capital of the trust fund would remain at the original figure (m).

SMOT. 1.
Liability of Trustees.

385. Where a loss is sustained through a breach of trust on the part of a trustee in neglecting to realise a security, he is charged with the full amount of the loss unless he can show that this amount would not have been produced if he had realised the security when he ought to have done so (n).

Neglect to realise security.

(ii.) Payment of Interest.

386. A trustee, besides being required to account for principal trust money, is also charged with interest on it in the following cases, namely:—(1) where he can be proved to have received interest; (2) where the presumption of his having received interest is so strong that he is estopped from alleging the contrary; (3) where the court is entitled to decide that he ought to have received interest; and (4) where in breach of his duty he (i.) retains trust money in his own hands uninvested (o), or (ii.) mixes it with his own money or property (p), or (iii.) employs it in trade or speculation (q), or (iv.) applies it in an unauthorised manner (r), or (v.) pays it to the wrong person (s), or (vi.) fails to produce or account for it when lawfully demanded by the cestui que trust or ordered by the court (t).

Liability for interest.

Liability of Trustees.
Rate of interest.

388. Where a trustee simply retains uninvested trust money which he ought to have invested, or there are no other special circumstances in the case, he is charged with simple interest at the rate of 4 per cent. (b). He is charged at the rate of 5 per cent., if he has removed the amount from a proper investment in which it was producing 5 per cent. (c) or otherwise commits a direct breach of trust (d); and compound interest is charged where by reason of a trust for accumulation or otherwise it was his duty to have invested the trust fund at compound interest (e), or where he employs it in trade or speculation for his own benefit (f), or is otherwise guilty of a gross breach of trust (g).

Liability to account.

A trustee is not necessarily excused by the breach having occurred through the fraud of his solicitor (Davis v. Hulchings, [1907] 1 Ch. 356; but see Re Smith, Smith v. Thompson, Smith v. Collis, [1905] 2 Ch. 24, C. A., per ROMER, L.J., at pp. 32 et seq.). Assent to a breach of trust may be given by a beneficiary entitled in reversion (Life Association of Scotland v. Siddal, Cooper v. Greene (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 58, per TURNER, L.J., at p. 73), but a person who subsequently becomes a beneficiary is not bound by his previous acquiescence in it (Re Clarke, Ex parte Smith (1841), 2 Mont. D. & De G. 113). The concurrence of the beneficiary in the breach need not be expressed in writing (MacLeod v. Annesley (1853), 16 Beav. 600, 607; Fletcher v. Collis, [1905] 2 Ch. 24, 33, C. A.). But the principle that the cestui que trust cannot complain of a breach of trust to which he was a party does not preclude a corporation from seeking were of full age (f) and under no incapacity (g), and were not acting under undue influence (h), and were fully informed of the circumstances (i). The fact that the beneficiaries obtain no personal benefit from the breach of trust is immaterial (k). A person claiming under a beneficiary stands in the same position as the beneficiary himself (l).

A married woman beneficially entitled for her separate use may lose the right to relief in respect of a breach of trust by acquiescence (Jones v. Higgins (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 538), but where she is restrained from anticipation she cannot consent to a breach of trust which will deprive her of future income (Dickson v. Hook (1866), 14 W. R. 552). beneficiaries or other persons entitled to enforce the liability (m), provided that they are of full age (n) and under no incapacity (o), and are not acting under undue influence (p), and have full information as to all material circumstances connected with the breach of trust (q). Where all do not join in the release, those who join are precluded from enforcing the liability (r). A release of one of several trustees may operate to release the others also (s).

401. The relief of a trustee from liability by the conduct of the beneficiary is governed by the same principles as relief by actual release (t). A beneficiary who, knowing of a breach of trust, obtains from the trustee part only of the trust property to which he is entitled, does not thereby, in the absence of evident intention, lose his right to a further claim against the trustee in respect of the rest of the property (a).

any person claiming through him, all rights and privileges conferred by any Statute of Limitations are enjoyed in the like manner and to the like extent as if he had not been a trustee or person claiming through a trustee (d), except where the claim (1) is founded upon fraud or fraudulent breach of trust to which the trustee was party or privy (e), or (2) is to recover trust property or the proceeds of trust property still retained by the trustee (f), or previously received by him and converted to his own use (g). If the proceeding is instituted to recover money or other property, and is one to which no existing Statute of Limitations applies, the trustee, except in the cases above mentioned, is entitled to the benefit of, and may plead, lapse of time in the like manner and to the like extent as if the claim had been against him in an action of debt for money had and received (h). Under any Statute of Limitations time runs against a married woman entitled in possession for her separate use, whether with or without a restraint on anticipation, but does not begin to run against a beneficiary unless and until his interest is an interest in possession (i).

derives any greater or other benefit from a judgment or order obtained in a proceeding by another beneficiary than he could have obtained if he had himself brought such proceeding and this provision had been pleaded (Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8 (2)). This provision does not deprive an executor or administrator of any right or defence to which he is entitled under any existing Statute of Limitations (ibid., s. 8 (3)). Where land or rent is vested in a trustee on an express trust, the right of the cestui que trust or any person claiming through him to bring an action against the trustee or any person claiming through him to recover such land or rent is deemed to have first accrued within the meaning of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), at and not before the time at which such land or rent is conveyed to a purchaser for valuable consideration, and is then deemed to have accrued only as against such person and any person claiming through him (ibid., s. 25); see also title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, Vol. XIX., pp. 68, 69, 139 et seq., 161 et seq.

(c) Including an executor or administrator and a trustee whose estate arises by construction or implication of law as well as an express trustee, but not the Official Trustee of Charitable Funds (Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 1). It is, however, doubtful whether an executor merely as such comes within the enactment (Lacons v. Warmoll, [1907] 2 K. B. 350, C. A., per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., at p. 362). Directors of a company committing a breach of trust can claim the benefit of the enactment (Re Lands Allotment Co., [1894] 1 Ch. 616, C. A.; Whitwam v. Watkin (1898), 78 L. T. 188; Re National Bank of Wales, Ltd., [1899] 2 Ch. 629, 663, C. A.). The enactment does not extend to protect a trustee in bankruptcy or other officer of the court (Re Cornish, Ex parte Board of Trade, [1896] 1 Q. B. 99, 104, C. A.).

SECT. 2.

Limitations on Liability of Trustees.

Relief independently of statute.

403. In cases to which the special statutory protection does not extend, a claim by a cestui que trust against his trustee for property held on an express trust, or in respect of a breach of an express trust, is not barred by any Statute of Limitations (j), except in the case of money charged on land (k). On the other hand, in the case of a constructive trust, proceedings to enforce liability for a breach of trust may be barred by mere lapse of time (l).

Proceedings against a trustee for breach of trust may, however, be barred, even in the case of an express trust, by the laches of the beneficiary, where such laches amounts to acquiescence or has caused the trustee to alter his position to his detriment (m).

These enactments have sanctioned and extended the jurisdiction in such cases which had been previously exercised by courts of equity (*Trafford v. The interest must be in the actual trust estate of which the trustee seeking to impound it is trustee (Ricketts v. Ricketts, supra). The rule applies where the beneficiary is one of the trustees (Chillingworth v. Chambers, [1896] 1 Ch. 685, C. A.). The beneficiary's interest may be impounded as against a person to whom it has been assigned subsequently to the breach of trust (Bolton v. Currie, supra, at pp. 548, 549), and as against the beneficiary's trustee in bankruptcy (Fletcher v. Collis, [1905] 2 Ch. 24, 39, C. A.).

(b) Monk v. Druce (1834), 4 L. J. (Ex. Eq.) 61; Chillingworth v. Chambers, supra. A trustee does not waive his equity to the indemnity by declining to take a mortgage of the beneficiary's interest as security for the breach of trust at the time of its commission (Bolton v. Currie, supra, at pp. 549, 550).

(c) Ricketts v. Ricketts, supra; Griffith v. Hughes, supra; Mara v. Browne, [1895] 2 Ch. 69, 93, 94; Re Holt, Re Kollason, Holt v. Holt, [1897] 2 Ch. 525; Molyneux v. Fletcher, [1898] 1 Q. B. 648, 656. The court exercises its discretion as to removing a restraint on anticipation in order that the interest of a married woman may be impounded (Bolton v. Currie, supra), and is slow to do so when the trustee ought to have protected her against herself when requested by her to commit the breach of trust (ibid., at p. 551). For the previous law as to impounding the interests of married women, see Davies v. Hodgson (1858), 25 Beav. 177; Clive v. Carew (1859), 1 John. & H. 199; Buller v. Cumpston (1868), L. has the same rights against them as the beneficiary had to whom he has made good the loss (f).

Where one of the trustees is also a beneficiary, he must bear the loss and indemnify his co-trustees to the full extent of his share in the trust estate, and can only claim contribution from them in respect of the amount, if any, by which the loss exceeds the value of his share (g).

Where one of the trustees obtains a personal benefit from a breach of trust in which the others took no active part, he must bear the loss to the extent of the benefit which he has obtained, and must indemnify his co-trustees to that extent (h).

406. In special circumstances (i) one of several trustees who has been alone actively concerned in committing a breach of trust may be deprived of the right to contribution from his co-trustees, and may be ordered to pay the whole amount of the loss and indemnify them in respect of it, and of all costs in relation thereto (k), and, where no actual loss has been sustained by the trust estate, to indemnify them against the costs of proceedings occasioned by the breach of trust (l). Independently of any action by the beneficiaries, one of several trustees who commits a breach of trust may be required by the others to make it good (m).

SECT. 3.—Liability of Other Persons.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General

When liability arises.

407. A beneficiary or agent or other person renders himself liable for the consequent loss to the trust estate where he knowingly becomes an active party to a fraudulent or improper disposition of the trust property in breach of the trust affecting it (n), or knowingly

A., per COTTON, L.J., at pp. 395, 396; Wynne v. Tempest, [1897] 1 Ch. 110. But the right of a co-trustee in such a case as this is not a right to indemnity entitling him to serve a third party notice under R. S. C., Ord. 16, r. 48 (Wynne v. Tempest, supra). As to third party notices, see title PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE, Vol. XXIII., pp. 162 et seq.

(i) Bahin v. Hughes, supra, at pp. 395, 396. The case may arise where the defaulting trustee is solicitor to the trust estate and is entrusted with the management of it (*Lockhart v. T. 654); but a solicitor-trustee will not, merely because he is a solicitor, be made to indemnify a co-trustee in respect of a breach of trust in which the co-trustee actually participated (Head v. Gould, [1898] 2 Ch. 250).

receives trust property and deals with it in a manner inconsistent with the trust (o), or where in acting for the trustee he commits a wrong for which he is liable to the trustee (p). On the other hand, he is not liable for a breach of trust when he has no notice of the trust (a) or of the intended trust (b), or when he merely acts as agent for a trustee (c).

Liability
of Other Persons.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Liability of Beneficiaries.

408. Where one of several beneficiaries procures trust money to be improperly laid out or to be paid away under a fraudulent appointment by him, or otherwise himself commits a breach of the terms of the trust, and part of the trust estate is consequently lost, the other beneficiaries are entitled as against him to have their shares made good out of his share of what is ultimately recovered (d), or out of any benefit which he has himself derived from the breach of trust (e). A beneficiary who induces a trustee to commit a breach of trust is primarily liable for it, and will be ordered to recoup to the trustee the amount which the trustee has been required to make good to the trust estate (f).

409. Where a beneficiary receives from the trustee more than he is entitled to, whether in respect of capital or income, he is liable to refund to the trust estate the excess which ought not to have been paid to him (g). The court in administering the estate will cause the amount wrongly paid to him in respect of one interest to be deducted from any other shares in the estate to which he is entitled (h).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Liability of Agents and Third Parties.

Liability as
trustee.

410. Where an agent or a third party by his conduct or the circumstances of the case has become a constructive or implied trustee or a trustee de son tort (i), he incurs for a breach of trust a liability similar to that of an express trustee (k).

SECT. 4.—Other Remedies.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Prevention.

Refusal of specific performance.

411. The court never lends its assistance to the commission of a breach of trust (l), and, therefore, does not decree specific performance of a contract which involves a breach of trust (m).

Injunction.

412. Where the court is satisfied that trustees are contemplating a breach of trust, it restrains the commission thereof by injunction (n).

property has come into the hands of a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of the trust, who has acquired a right to it paramount to that of the persons claiming under the trust by reason of his having the legal estate therein or the best right to call for it (a), or unless the property has passed as money or as a negotiable instrument without notice of the trust (b). Part V.—Judicial Trustees.

SECT. 1.—Appointment and Discontinuance.

418. Under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (h), the court having jurisdiction in the matter (i) may in its discretion, on an application by or on behalf of a creator or intending creator of a trust (k), or a trustee (l) or beneficiary (m), appoint a person (n) as judicial trustee

(h) 59 & 60 Vict. c. 35.

(i) The jurisdiction is exercisable by the Chancery Division of the High Court, either in London or in a district registry, and, as respects trusts within its jurisdiction, by a palatine court (see title COURTS, Vol. IX., pp. 120 et seq.); and as respects trusts in which the trust property does not exceed in value £500, by the metropolitan county courts mentioned in the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Sched. III., or a county court having at the time bankruptcy jurisdiction (Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 2; Judicial Trustee Rules (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. XII., Supreme Court, England, p. 911), 1897, rr. 2, 29, 30, 31). As to the jurisdiction of county courts, see title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., pp. 660, 661.

(k) The Act does not extend to a charity (Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 6 (2)); but the administration of the property of a deceased testator or intestate is a trust within the Act (ibid., s. 1 (2); Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 25).

(l) Including an executor or administrator (Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 1 (2); Re Ratcliff, [1898] 2 Ch. 352, per KEENEWICH, J., at pp. 355, 356 (where it was said that the Act authorised the removal of an executor)).

(m) The application may be made in a pending cause or matter or by originating summons (Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, rr. 2—4).

(n) Any fit person nominated in the application may be appointed, including a beneficiary or relative, or solicitor, or a married woman, or an existing trustee (Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 1 (3); Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 5). If no one is nominated or the court is not satisfied as to the fitness of the person nominated, the court may appoint any fit person otherwise suggested (Douglas v. Bolam, [1900] 2 Ch. 749, C. A.), or the official solicitor of the court; and, where the proceedings are taken in a district registry, or a palatine court, or a county court, some other official of the court may be appointed (Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), ss. 1 (3), 5; Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, rr. 7, 29 (3), 30 (2), 31 (3)). to be a trustee of the trust either jointly with any other person or as sole trustee, and, for sufficient cause, in place of all or any existing trustees (o). On his appointment the trust property is to be vested in him either solely or jointly with other trustees, as the case requires (p).

Discharge.

419. Where a judicial trustee desires to be discharged, he must give notice to the court, and state what arrangement it is proposed to make with regard to the appointment of a successor; and an official of the court will be appointed in his place if no other fit person is available for the office (q).

Suspension or removal.

420. A judicial trustee may be suspended or removed on the application of a person interested in the trust, or, if the court thinks fit, without any application (r).

Cesser of judicial trustee.

421. The court may, on the application of any of the persons interested in the trust, and must, if they all so desire, order that there shall cease to be a judicial trustee of the trust, whether the person who is judicial trustee continues as a trustee of the trust or not (s).

SECT. 2.—Security.

Security.

422. A judicial trustee, if not an official of the court, must, before his appointment can take effect, give security for the due application of the trust property by recognisance, bond, or otherwise as the trustee, funds can be held by him under his official title (Judicial Trustee Additional Rule, 1899 (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. XII., Supreme Court, England, p. 922)); and all remuneration, allowances and payments for his services as such are paid and applied and the trust property is dealt with as the Treasury direct (Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 18; Judicial Trustee Rule, April, 1900 (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. XII., Supreme Court, England, p. 923)). Where an official of the court who is judicial trustee of a trust dies or ceases to hold office, his successor, in the absence of direction to the contrary, becomes judicial trustee, and the trust property becomes vested in him (Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 7 (4)). An official of the court is not to be appointed judicial trustee for members or debenture-holders of, or persons being in any other relation to, a company, whether incorporated or unincorporated, or a club, and if the trust involves carrying on a trade or business, that circumstance is to be taken into account in reference to whether or under what special conditions he should be appointed (ibid., r. 26). As to appointing the Public Trustee a judicial trustee, see p. 213, post.

(o) Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), ss. 1. 4. The appointment is in the discretion of the court, and will not be made where there is good reason to the contrary (Re Chisholm, Legal Reversionary Society v. Knight (1898), 43 Sol. Jo. 43; Re Ratcliff, [1898] 2 Ch. 352 (where the application was refused and an ordinary trustee was appointed); Re Martin, [1900] W. SECT. 2.
Security.

SECT. 3.—Administration and Accounts of the Trust.

423. Except where the court considers it unnecessary, a judicial trustee must, as soon as practicable after his appointment, furnish the court with a complete statement of the trust property containing an approximate estimate of the income and capital value of each item, and must from time to time give to the court all information necessary for keeping the statement correct (b).

Statement
property.

424. Where there is a judicial trustee, a separate account of the trust must be kept in the names of the trustees at a bank approved by the court, and the judicial trustee must forthwith pay to that account all trust money coming to his hands; and all the trust documents of title must be deposited with that bank, or in such other custody as the court directs, in the names of the trustees; and the judicial trustee must deposit a list of such documents with the court (c).

425. Fees are prescribed to cover the expenses of the administration of the Act, and, when paid by a judicial trustee, may be deducted out of the income of the trust property, unless the court otherwise directs (d).

Fees.

426. A judicial trustee may at any time request the court to give him directions as to the trust or its administration, and the court may at any time give him such directions without any request on his part (e).

Directions by the court.

427. The court may at any time order an inquiry into the administration of a trust by a judicial trustee, or into any dealing or transaction of a judicial trustee (f).

Inquiry by the court.

(t) Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 9. Where an administrator who has given an administration bond is appointed a judicial trustee, he need not give security as such unless so directed by the court (ibid., r. 25 (2)). The amount is ordinarily six-fifths of the estimated income of the trust property (ibid., r. 9 (4)). A premium payable by a judicial trustee to a guarantee company on account of his security may be directed by the court to be paid out of the trust property (ibid., r. 9 (9)).

SECT. 3.

Administration and Accounts of the Trust.*Audit of accounts.

428. Where there is a judicial trustee the accounts of the trust are audited once a year (g) and, together with a note of any corrections made upon the audit, are filed as the court directs (h). Unless the court otherwise directs, the judicial trustee is allowed on the audit deductions on account of his remuneration and allowances and fees paid by him, but not on account of the expenses of professional assistance or his own work or personal outlay, unless authorised by the court or justified by the strict necessity of the case (i).

SECT. 4.—*Remuneration.Amount of remuneration.

429. A judicial trustee may receive out of the trust property such remuneration as is in each case fixed by the court, which, unless the court for special reasons otherwise orders, covers all his work and personal outlay (k). The court may, if it thinks fit, make to him out of the trust property special allowances of a limited amount for the statement of the trust property prepared by him on his appointment, and for realising and investing or reinvesting trust property, and for extraordinary trouble caused by special circumstances (l).

Forfeiture of remuneration.

Where a judicial trustee fails to comply with the Act or the rules or with any direction of the court or of an officer of the court thereunder, or otherwise misconducts himself in relation to the trust, the court may, after he has had the opportunity of being heard, order that the whole or any part of his remuneration be forfeited (m).

Part VI.—The Public Trustee.

SECT. 1.—*Appointment, Status, and Officers.Appointment and officers.

430. The Public Trustee is an officer who is appointed by the Lord Chancellor under the Public Trustee Act, 1906 (n). He (g) Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 1 (6). The court fixes the date to which the accounts are to be made up in each year, and the time after that date within which the accounts are to be delivered to it for audit (Judicial Trustee Rules, 1897, r. 14 (1)). The accounts are ordinarily audited by the officer of the court; but if they are likely to involve questions of difficulty, they may be referred to a professional accountant for report at such remuneration as the court fixes (ibid., r. 14 (2)).

(h) Ibid., r. 15 (1). The judicial trustee is to send a copy or summary of the accounts to such beneficiaries or other persons as the court thinks proper; and the court may allow the filed accounts to be inspected on reasonable notice by persons connected with the trust (ibid., r. 15 (2), (3)).

(n) 6 Edw. 7, c. 55. The objects of the Act are carried into effect by rules made by the Lord Chancellor with the concurrence of the Treasury (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 14). Legal proceedings under the Act are taken in the High Court; but in cases within the jurisdiction of a palatine court, that court has concurrent powers (ibid., ss. 10, 12, 13 (7)).

holds office during pleasure, receiving such salary or fees (o) and being appointed on such terms as the Treasury determines (p). The Lord Chancellor appoints such officers of the Public Trustee as, subject to the sanction of the Treasury, he considers necessary for the purposes of the Act, and they hold office upon such terms and are remunerated at such rates and in such manner as the Treasury sanctions (q). A person appointed Public Trustee or an officer of the Public Trustee may, and, if the Treasury so requires, must, be a person already in the public service (r). The Central Office of the Public Trustee is in London (s).

SECT. 1.
Appointment,
Status, and Officers.

431. The Public Trustee is a corporation sole with perpetual succession and a common seal, and can sue and be sued by that name (t), and can hold land (u). Scope of office.

The Public Trustee may be appointed to be a judicial trustee (v), or to be administrator of the property of a convict under the Forfeiture Act, 1870 (a). He cannot, however, accept a trust exclusively for religious or charitable purposes (b); or a trust which involves the management or carrying on of a business, except to the extent to which he is authorised to do so by rules made under the Act (c); or a trust under a deed of arrangement for the benefit of creditors; or the administration of an estate known or believed by him to be insolvent (d).

SECT. 2.—Ordinary Trusteeship.

432. The Public Trustee may be appointed, either originally or as a new or additional trustee, to be trustee of a will or settlement or other instrument creating a trust, or to perform a trust or duty belonging to a class which he is authorised by rules made under the Act to accept, in like manner in all respects as if he were a private trustee, except that he may be appointed sole trustee, acting as trustee of instrument of trust.

(s) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 8 (4); Public Trustee Rules, 1912, r. 3. The Lord Chancellor may, by notice in the London Gazette, from time to time prescribe the establishment of branch offices and notify the appointment at such offices of officers of the Public Trustee (see the text, supra) by the name of deputy public trustees, who have the powers and perform the duties assigned to them under the rules (Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 3 (2), 4). As from the 1st April, 1914, a branch office has been established at Manchester.

notwithstanding that two or more trustees were originally appointed (e), and notwithstanding that the instrument creating the trust directs that the number of trustees shall not be less than three (f). He may also be appointed under the Settled Land Act, 1882 (g), to be sole trustee of a settlement (h).

Retirement of co-trustee.

433. Where the Public Trustee has been appointed a trustee, a co-trustee may retire from the trust under the Trustee Act, 1893 (i), s. 11, without the consents thereby required, and notwithstanding that there are not more than two trustees (k).

Subject to the Act and the rules he may accept as ordinary trustee any trust created by a trust instrument or arising upon an intestacy, except the trusts of an instrument made solely by way of security for money (Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 6—8). Where the will, settlement, or other instrument creating the trust or duty contains a direction to the contrary, he cannot be appointed unless the court having jurisdiction in the matter (see note (n), p. 212, ante) so orders (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 5 (3)). He may decline a trust absolutely or accept on conditions, but not on the ground only of small value (ibid., s. 2 (3)). In the case of his appointment by a testator his subsequent consent, and in every other case his previous consent, to act is requisite (Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 8—10; Re Shaw, Public Trustee v. Little, [1914] W. N. 141, C. A.). Notice of his proposed appointment as a new or additional trustee must, so far as practicable, be given to the beneficiaries under the trust, or to their guardians where they are infants (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 5 (4); Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 40 (2), (3), 41); and the court may, upon application by any of them, within twenty-one days after receipt of the notice, prohibit the appointment if the interests of all the beneficiaries appear so to require (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 5 (4); Re Hope Johnstone's Settlement Trusts (1909), 25 T. The Public Trustee is considered as in law entitled equally with any other person or class of persons to obtain the grant of letters of administration; but the consent or citation of the Public Trustee is not required for the grant of the letters to any other person; and as between the Public Trustee and the widower, widow, or next of kin of the deceased, they are to be preferred to him, unless good cause is shown to the contrary (Public Trustee Act 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 6 (1)).

SECT. 2.
Ordinary
ship.

SECT. 3.—Custodian Trusteeship.

435. Where the Public Trustee is appointed custodian trustee of a trust (n), the trust property is to be transferred to him as if he were sole trustee (o); but the management of the trust property and the exercise of all powers and discretions under the trust remain vested in the other trustees as managing trustees (p). As between himself and the other trustees, he has the custody of all the trust securities and documents of title, but they have free access thereto and are entitled to take copies and extracts (q).

Public
Trustee as custodian
trustee.

In determining the number of trustees for the purposes of the Trustee Act, 1893 (r), the custodian trustee is not reckoned as a trustee (s).

The power of appointing new trustees, when exercisable by the trustees, is exercisable by the managing trustees alone; but the custodian trustee has the same power as any other trustee of applying to the court for the appointment of a new trustee (t).

(m) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 6 (2). Subject to the provisions of the Act, the order of the court sanctioning the transfer confers on the Public Trustee all the powers of the transferring executor or administrator; and the transferring executor or administrator is not liable in respect of any act or default in reference to the estate subsequent to the date of the order, other than an act or default of himself or of some person for whose conduct he is in law responsible (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7 c. 55), s. 6 (2)).

(n) As to his appointment in that capacity, see p. 86, ante.

(o) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 4 (2) (a). Vesting orders for the purpose may, where necessary, be made under the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53); see pp. 103 et seq., ante. All sums payable to or out of the income or capital of the trust property are payable to or by the custodian trustee; but he may allow the income arising from the trust property to be paid to the other trustees, or to such person or the banking account of such person, as they direct; and in that case he is exonerated from seeing to its application or being answerable for its loss or misapplication (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 4 (2) (e)).

(p) Ibid., s. 4 (2) (b). The custodian trustee is to concur in and perform all acts necessary to enable the managing trustees to exercise their powers of management or any other power or discretion vested in them (including power to pay money or securities into court), unless the matter is a breach of trust or involves personal liability on him in respect of calls or otherwise. Where he does not so concur, he is not liable for any act or default on the part of any of the managing trustees (ibid., s. 4 (2) (d)). If he acts in good faith, he is not liable for accepting as correct, and acting upon the faith of, a written statement by the managing trustees as to a birth, death, marriage, or other matter of pedigree or relationship, or of fact, upon which the title to any of the trust property depends, or for acting upon legal advice obtained by the managing trustees independently of him (ibid., s. 4 (2) (h)).

436. On the application of either the custodian trustee or any managing trustee or beneficiary, and on proof that the termination of the custodian trusteeship is generally desired by the beneficiaries or is on other grounds expedient, the court may make an order for the purpose, and make such vesting orders and give such directions as appear necessary or expedient (a).

437. Where an application to the Public Trustee to administer an estate (b) is made by a person who in the opinion of the Public Trustee would be entitled to apply to the court for an order for its administration by the court, and the Public Trustee is satisfied that the gross capital value thereof is less than £1,000 (c), and that the persons beneficially entitled thereto are persons of small means, he must administer the estate unless he sees good reason to the contrary (d).

Effect of undertaking administration.

438. On the Public Trustee undertaking, by a declaration under his hand and seal, to administer an estate the trust property other than stock and the right to transfer or call for the transfer of stock forming part of the estate vest in him in like manner as if vesting orders for the purpose had been made by the High Court under the Trustee Act, 1893 (e); and that Act applies accordingly (f). As from such vesting, any trustee entitled under the trust to administer the estate is discharged from all liability attaching to the administration, except in respect of past acts (g).

Opinion of the court.

439. The Public Trustee can, without judicial proceedings, take the opinion of the High Court upon any question arising in the course of an administration (h).

(a) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 4 (2) (i).

(b) That is to say, the estate of a deceased person (Re Devereux, Toovey v. Public Trustee, [1911] 2 Ch. 545, per EVE, J., at p. 548).

(c) That is to say, at the time when the application is made, although the original value was greater (ibid.).

(d) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 3 (1); Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 12–16. For the purposes of the administration he has (subject to the rules) all the administrative powers and authorities exercisable by a master of the Supreme Court acting in the administration of an estate (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 3 (3); Public Trustee Rules, 1912, r. 14). A refusal by the Public Trustee to administer the estate does not prevent him from exercising with respect to the estate any other powers exercisable by him under the Act or the rules which he may be duly appointed to exercise (Public Trustee Rules, 1912, r. 13 (3)).

(e) 56 & 57 Vict. c. 53; see pp. 103 et seq., ante.

(f) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 3 (2). The Public Trustee cannot himself transfer stock without the leave of the court (ibid.). Copyhold land forming part of the estate does not vest in him, but he has in respect of it the like powers, and the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 34 (2), applies in like manner, as if he had been appointed by the court under ibid., s. 33, to convey the land (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 3 (2)). Deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank standing in the names of deceased depositors whose estates are being administered by the Public Trustee are transferred into his name (Post Office Savings Bank (Public Trustee) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 52), s. 1 (1)).

(g) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 3 (2).

(h) Ibid., s. 3 (4); Public Trustee Rules, 1912, r. 15.

440. Where proceedings have been instituted in any court for the administration of an estate, and by reason of its small value the court considers that it can be more economically administered by the Public Trustee, or that for any other reason it should be administered by him, the court may order that it be administered by him, in like manner, subject to any special directions by the court, as if he had undertaken it upon an application to him for the purpose (i).

SECT. 5.—Investigation of Trust Accounts.

441. A trustee or beneficiary of a trust may apply to the Public Trustee for an investigation and audit of the condition and accounts of the trust (k). Notice is given, where the applicant is a beneficiary, to every trustee, and where the applicant is a trustee, to each co-trustee and to the person entitled to the income of the trust property; and the applicant and the trustees may within three months after receipt of the notice agree on a solicitor or public accountant to act as auditor in the investigation and audit. If they fail to agree, the Public Trustee or some person appointed by him is to act as auditor (l).

Application for investigation and audit of accounts.

442. An auditor may be removed by an order of the court; and if an auditor is removed, or resigns, or dies, or becomes bankrupt or incapable of acting before the investigation and audit is completed, a new auditor may be appointed in his place in like manner as the original auditor (m).

Removal of auditor and of new auditor.

443. On the completion of the investigation and audit, the auditor forwards to the applicant and to every trustee a copy of the accounts, together with a report thereon and a certificate signed by him to the effect that the accounts exhibit a true view of the trust, and that he has seen and verified the trust securities, or, if such is the case, that the accounts are deficient in the respects specified in the certificate (n).

Report and certificate of auditor.

444. The amount of the auditor's remuneration and other expenses of the investigation and audit is fixed by agreement between the trustees, the person entitled to the income of the trust property, and the auditor, or, in default of agreement, by the Public Trustee, who, in fixing it, has regard to the estimated value of the

(k) Ibid., s. 13.

(l) Ibid.; Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 31—37. The investigation and audit take place unless the High Court, or, in cases within its jurisdiction, a county court, otherwise orders (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), ss. 13 (1), (7), 15; and see title COUNTY COURTS, Vol. VIII., pp. 678, 680). A trustee or beneficiary cannot be appointed auditor (Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 13 (1)). The auditor has full powers of inspecting documents and requiring information (ibid., s. 13 (2), (6), (7); Re Williams (James), deceased (1910), 26 T. L. R. 604).

(m) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 13 (4).

(n) Ibid., s. 13 (2). A beneficiary is entitled to inspect and take copies of the accounts, report and certificate, and, at his own expense, to be furnished with copies thereof or extracts therefrom (ibid., s. 13 (3)). Wilfully making a statement false in any material particular in any statement of accounts, report or certificate, is punishable by fine or imprisonment or both (ibid., s. 13 (8)).

SECT. 5. Investigation of Trust Accounts. trust property, the time occupied or likely to be occupied by the investigation and audit, and other circumstances. Unless he otherwise directs, the amount is borne by the estate; but he may order it to be borne by the applicant or by the trustees personally, or partly by them and partly by the applicant (o).

SECT. 6.—Conduct of Business.

Register and accounts. 445. A register is kept at the Central Office in London of a trust in which the Public Trustee is acting as trustee or custodian trustee, and of all estates in course of administration by him, whether from the Central Office or from any branch office (p). Separate accounts of capital and income are kept for every trust or estate (q), and the capital and income is dealt with, and the accounts are audited, in the manner prescribed by rules made under the Act (r).

No notice of trust. 446. A company cannot object to enter the Public Trustee on its books on account only of his being a corporation, and the entry does not constitute notice of a trust (s). In dealings with property the fact that the person or one of the persons dealt with is the Public Trustee does not of itself constitute notice of a trust (t).

Employment of solicitors and other agents. 447. The Public Trustee is empowered to employ solicitors, bankers, accountants, brokers and other persons, having regard in each case to the interests of the trust, and, where practicable, to the express or implied wishes of the creator of the trust and the other trustees, if any, and the beneficiaries (a).

Appeal. 448. Persons aggrieved by any act or omission or decision of the Public Trustee may appeal to a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court in chambers or, in cases within its jurisdiction, to a county court (b).

SECT. 7.—Discharge of Liabilities.

No bond or security. 449. The Public Trustee upon the grant to him of administration, or upon his appointment to act in any capacity, is not required to give any bond or security which would be required from a private person, but is subject to the same liabilities and duties as if he had given the bond or security (c).

(o) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 13 (5); Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 35—37. The costs of wholly unnecessary applications may be directed to be paid by the applicant (Re Utley, Russell v. Cubitt, [1912] W. N. 147). A person ordered to pay the costs can appeal from the order (Re Oddy, [1911] 1 Ch. 532).

(p) Public Trustee Rules, 1912, r. 16. Regulations are made for the inspection and taking of copies of entries in the register (ibid., r. 29).

(q) Ibid., r. 19. The Public Trustee can, in respect of separate trusts, keep separate accounts in the Post Office Savings Bank (Post Office Savings Bank (Public Trustee) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 52), s. 1 (1)).

(r) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 14; Public Trustee Rules, 1912, rr. 17, 18, 20—29, 31—37.

(c) Public Trustee Act, 1907 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 11 (4).

450. Where a liability is incurred which the Public Trustee, if he were a private trustee, would be personally liable to discharge, the Consolidated Fund is liable to make good all sums required to discharge it; if, however, the loss is one to which neither the Public Trustee nor any of his officers has in any way contributed, and which neither he nor they could by the exercise of reasonable diligence have averted, neither the Public Trustee nor the Consolidated Fund is subject to any liability in respect of it (d).

SECT. 8.—Remuneration.

451. The Public Trustee receives such salary or fees as the Treasury determines (e); and such fees are chargeable to the public, in respect of his duties as the Treasury fixes with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor (f). He retains and pays out of any trust property the fees chargeable in respect thereof, and any expenses which might have been retained or paid out of the property, if he had been a private trustee (g). No other reward may be taken by him or any of his officers for discharging the duties of the office (h).

(d) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 7.

(f) Ibid., s. 9 (1). The fees are arranged from time to time so as to produce annually sufficient to discharge the salaries and incidental expenses under the Act, including a sum to insure the Consolidated Fund against loss (ibid., s. 9 (4)), and are applied in aid of moneys provided by Parliament for expenses under the Act, and so far as not so applied are paid into the Exchequer (ibid., s. 9 (3)). The scale of fees is fixed by the Public Trustee (Fees) Order, 1912 (Stat. R. & O., 1912, Trustee, pp. 1241 et seq.). Where the trust property consists wholly or in part of reversionary interests or property not readily realisable, the Public Trustee may charge an additional fee (ibid., r. 5); and where the circumstances of a trust or estate appear to him to render, or to be likely to render, his duties in relation thereto exceptionally onerous, he may, with the approval of the Treasury, charge a special additional fee, and may make its payment, or the agreement to pay it, a condition of his accepting the trust or administering the estate (ibid., r. 6); and where his duties with regard to a trust or estate appear to be, or to be likely to be, exceptionally simple, or otherwise of an exceptional character, he may, with the approval of the Treasury, remit a part not exceeding one-half of any fee payable in respect thereof (ibid., r. 7).

(g) Public Trustee Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 55), s. 9 (2). The incidence of the fees and expenses as between capital and income is determined by the Public Trustee (ibid., s. 9 (5)). He may in certain cases commute fees, and may, with the approval of the Treasury, agree to any mode of payment of fees which seems to him just and reasonable (Public Trustee (Fees) Order, 1912, rr. 9—11).

SECT. 1.—Licences to Act.

452. Every person who values or appraises any estate or property, real or personal, or any interest in possession or reversion, remainder, or contingency in any estate or property, real or personal, or any goods, merchandise, or effects of whatsoever kind or description for or in expectation of hire, gain, fee, or reward, to be therefor paid to him, is deemed and taken to be an appraiser to all intents and purposes (a), and must take out an annual licence (b). Any person who acts as an appraiser or valuer for or in expectation of reward without taking out the requisite licence is liable for each offence to forfeit the sum of £50 (c); and without such licence he cannot recover at law remuneration for work done as an appraiser (d).

SECT. 1.
Licences to Act.

Grant of

When licence unnecessary.

Single
valuation.

453. The licence is granted by such officer or officers of excise, and is in such form as the Commissioners of Inland Revenue direct (e). It must state the true name and place of abode of the person who takes it out (f).

454. The following persons may act as appraisers without taking out licences so to act, namely, a duly licensed auctioneer (g), a county court bailiff authorised in writing by the county court judge to act as appraiser for valuing goods, chattels, or effects taken in execution (h), and a duly licensed house agent (i).

455. A person who has not the known character of an appraiser does not become such merely by making a valuation in a single instance (k).

SECT. 2.—Duties and Liabilities.

Competency and duties in general.

456. Any person who purports to act as a valuer and appraiser holds himself out as competent to act as such (l). He is not bound to know the intricacies of the law, but he is bound to know its general principles (m). It is his duty, notwithstanding what may apparently be incomplete instructions, to determine what are the facts and circumstances connected with the property which it is necessary for him to take into account in arriving at his valuation (n). In advising trustees as to property on which it is proposed to invest trust funds, a valuer should advise as to the amount which it is safe to advance on that particular property, in addition to advising as to its actual value (o). A valuer should not be an interested party in the subject-matter of the valuation (p), and he should act independently of the owner of the property to be valued (q).

(q) Shaw v. Cates, supra, at pp. 396, 403, 404.

457. A valuer and appraiser has a duty to his employer to use in carrying out his work that skill which his undertaking the work warrants (r), and to do the work with reasonable care and diligence. If he has not such skill, or fails to exercise such reasonable care and diligence, he is liable to his employer for the damages naturally resulting from his lack of skill, care, or diligence (s), and cannot, at all events where the valuation is so inaccurate as to be useless, recover any remuneration for the work which he has done (t). He is not liable, however, to persons other than his employer for such lack of skill, care, or diligence (u).

SECT. 2.
Duties and Liabilities.

Liability for careless or unskilful
valuation.

458. A valuer and appraiser who makes a valuation which is fraudulent, namely, one which is either false to his knowledge, or one as to the truth of which he knows or cares nothing, with the intention that such valuation shall be acted upon, is liable to an action of deceit by any person who was intended to act upon such valuation, and who acts upon it to his detriment (w).

Fraudulent
valuation.

SECT. 3.—Valuation to Fix Purchase Price.

459. In making valuations to fix the purchase price, the duty of the valuer is to have a reasonable degree of skill and to act with reasonable care and diligence. He is not in the position of an arbitrator (x), and is liable to an action for negligence (y); but the valuation, when made, however faulty it may be, is binding upon the valuer's employer in the absence of fraud, mistake, or collusion, provided that it is clear that the employer agreed to be bound thereby (a).

valuer.

(w) See Derry v. Peek (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; and compare Le Lievre v. Gould, supra. As to representations made without a belief in their truth, compare title MISREPRESENTATION AND FRAUD, Vol. XX., pp. 688 et seq.; as to fraud generally, see ibid., pp. 759 et seq.

(x) A valuer differs from an arbitrator in that he does not hear the parties and determine judicially between them, but decides solely by using his eyes, his knowledge, and his skill (Re Dawdy (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 426, C. A., following Collins v. Collins (1858), 26 Beav. 306, and Bos v. Helsham (1866), L. R. 2 Exch. 72, and distinguishing Re Hopper (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 367); see, further, title ARBITRATION, Vol. I., pp. 440, 441. Hence, a valuation in order to prevent a difference between the parties arising does not preclude either party from afterwards raising a difference (Sutherland v. Sun Fire Office (1852), 14 Dunt. (Ct. of Sess.) 775); and an agreement for a valuation may be combined with an agreement for arbitration if the valuation is unsatisfactory (Johnson v. Hopper (1858), 4 Jur. (N. S.) 882).

(y) Turner v. Goulden, supra; compare title ARBITRATION, Vol. I., p. 459.

SECT. 3.
Valuation
to Fix Purchase Price.

Valuation not made.

460. Where an agreement has been made for the sale or purchase of property to be fixed by valuation, and the valuation is not or cannot be made in the mode agreed upon, specific performance of the agreement is not granted, as the court does not make a contract for the parties, and the price is an essential part of the contract (b). Where, however, a valuer has been properly appointed, and a party refuses to permit him to value, the court orders that such party shall allow the valuation to proceed (c). Where there is a clear and completed contract, and the term as to valuation is subsidiary only, specific performance is granted (d).

Stamp duty on appraisement or valuation.

461. Every appraiser by whom an appraisement or valuation chargeable with stamp duty is made must, within fourteen days of its being made, write it out, in words and figures showing its full amount, on duly stamped material. If he neglects or omits to do so, or in any other manner discloses the amount of the appraisement or valuation, he is liable to a fine of £50 (e), and any person who receives from any appraiser or pays for the making of any such appraisement or valuation is liable, unless the same is duly written out and stamped, to a fine of £20 (f). These provisions as to stamping apply to the appraisement or valuation of any property, or of any

The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries (see note (o), p. 231, ante) may, if it thinks fit, require a valuation to be made by a selected or approved surveyor as a condition precedent to approving proposals for any sale, enfranchisement, exchange, purchase, or mortgage under these provisions (Universities and College Estates Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 44), s. 2). Part I.—Powers and Duties as to Water Supply under the General Law.

SECT. 1.—Introductory.

SECT. 1.

Introductory.

Rights of landowners.

464. The owner of land has, as incidental to such ownership, the right to collect, store, use and supply to others, the water that is percolating therein (a). As regards water flowing in defined channels, either through or on the boundaries of his land, his rights incidental to ownership are limited by corresponding rights of other riparian owners. They include the right to use and consume the water for domestic purposes and for his cattle, and, further, to use a reasonable amount for the irrigation of, or for manufacturing purposes on, his land, provided that he returns the water so used substantially undiminished in volume and unaltered in character (b); but he may not use such water for the purposes of supplying persons outside his land (c). He may, however, acquire by purchase or otherwise the rights of other owners, and so become entitled to divert the whole or part of the water in a stream for the purpose of a general water supply (d).

(a) Ohasmore v. Richards (1859), 7 H. L. Cas. 349; English v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1907] 1 K. B. 588; and see titles EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE, Vol. XI., p. 310; WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, p. 358, post.

(d) As to purchase of water rights, see p. 255, post. Where water rights are purchased or granted by deed, the nature of such rights are to be

SECT. 1.

Introductory.Supply for
consumption.

465. In many places water for general consumption is supplied by individuals and companies without any special statutory powers, and their rights and liabilities are governed by the general law (e). Under public general statutes local authorities have important duties imposed upon them in regard to water supply, and have wide powers of supplying water (f); parish councils also have certain restricted powers (g), while limited owners are empowered for the purpose of supplying water (h) to charge their lands. In a large number of cases, however, the water supply of a district is carried on by companies under powers contained in local Acts or Provisional Orders, or by local authorities whose general powers have been supplemented by such Acts or Orders (i).

owners.

466. Landowners having limited interests in their land may construct waterworks of a permanent character for the supply of water, either to persons residing on their land or engaged in labour thereon, or for the more convenient and profitable user of their land, or for the supply of water to any local authority, water company, manufacturer or other person, or for any one or more of such purposes, and, subject to certain conditions, to charge their estates with the expenses thereof (k). Such landowners may not, however, injuriously affect any water rights of other persons without their consent (l), but in connexion with the works may by agreement purchase any water right or easement which might otherwise interfere with or prevent the construction of the works or with the supply of water (m).

SECT. 2.—*Duties of Local Authorities.*SUB-SECT. 1.—*In General.*Provision of water supply.

467. Where complaint is made to the Local Government Board that a local authority has made default in providing its district determined by the construction of such deed, independently of any rights the parties would have had as riparian owners or otherwise (Whitehead v. Parks (1858), 2 H. & N. 870).

(e) As to the liability of such persons in respect of breaking up the streets to lay pipes, see title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 307, and the cases there cited.

(f) See the text, infra, pp. 254 et seq., post. By "local authority" is meant a local authority as defined in the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), as amended; see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXI., p. 372. The term includes the councils of county boroughs, of boroughs, and of urban and rural districts.

As to the power of a landowner to contribute towards the expenses of a district council in supplying his land with water, see title LAND IMPROVEMENT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 281, 282; see also p. 262, post; as to the powers of limited owners to execute permanent improvements generally, see titles LAND IMPROVEMENT, Vol. XVIII., pp. 283, 284; SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 644, 645.

Duties of Local

with a supply of water, in cases where danger arises to the health of the inhabitants from the insufficiency or unwholesomeness of the existing supply of water, and a proper supply can be got at a reasonable cost (n), the Board, if satisfied after due inquiry that the authority has been guilty of the alleged default, must make an order limiting a time for the performance by the authority of its duty in the matter of such complaint (o). If such duty is not performed by the time so limited, the order may be enforced by writ of mandamus, or the Local Government Board may appoint some person to perform such duty, and may from time to time change any person so appointed (p). A like complaint may be made by a parish council to the county council in respect of the water supply of the parish, and the county council, if satisfied after due inquiry that the district council has so failed, may resolve that the duties and powers of the district council in respect of such water supply be transferred to the county council (q).

468. In certain conditions it is the duty of a local authority, whether urban or rural, to give notice in writing to the owner of any house (r) within its district requiring him, within a time therein specified, to obtain a proper water supply for such house, and to do all such works as may be necessary for that purpose (s). Notice requiring supply to be obtained.

(n) Persons making the complaint are required by the Local Government Board to furnish evidence that a proper and sufficient supply can be obtained and at a reasonable cost. An objection to a notice requiring an owner to supply his house with water may amount to such a complaint; see p. 252, post.

Oswaldtwistle Urban Council*, [1898] 1 C. 387); see title SEWERS AND DRAINS, Vol. XXV., pp. 732, 736. (q) Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 16 (1); see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 375. The county council may, instead of so resolving, make a like order to that mentioned in the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 299 (see note (p), supra), and may appoint a person to perform the duty, and thereupon the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 299—302, apply, with the substitution of the county council for the Local Government Board (Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 16 (2)); see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 375. For form of resolution, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 181; for form of complaint by parish council, see ibid., p. 182.

SMO. 2.
Duties of Local Authorities.

The conditions are that it must appear to the authority on the report of its surveyor that the house is without a proper supply of water, and that such a supply of water can be furnished to the house at a cost for such supply (t) not exceeding either the water rate authorised by any local Act in force within the district, or where there is no such Act in force, at a cost not exceeding 2d. a week, or at such other cost as the Local Government Board may on the application determine in all the circumstances of the case to be reasonable (u). On such an application the Board may by order fix a general scale of charges for the whole or any part of the district of the local authority. The cost of the supply of water to any house within the area specified in the order is deemed to be determined to be reasonable if it does not exceed the cost authorised by such general scale of charges (x). If the notice is unreasonable, as by reason of the expense of bringing the water being excessive, an appeal against the order of the local authority lies to the Local Government Board (a).

Non-compliance with notice.

469. If such notice to the owner is not complied with within the time specified in the notice, the local authority may, if it thinks fit, do such work and obtain such supply, and for that purpose may enter into any contract with any water company supplying water within the district (b). Water rates may be made and levied on the premises by the authority or company which furnishes the supply, and may be recovered as if the owner or occupier of the premises had demanded a supply of water and was willing to pay water rates for the same (c); and such rates may be recovered whether the connexion between the mains and the house has been made or not (d). Any expenses incurred by the local authority in doing any such works may be recovered summarily (e), or may, by order

As to the nature of expenses under this provision, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 281, 282, 336, 337.

(t) The cost referred to evidently relates only to the supply, and is distinct from the expense of laying mains and making connexions in order to enable the house to have a supply; see, for example, Southend Waterworks Co. v. Howard (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 215; and compare Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), s. 8, which provision seems to be applicable primarily to cases where the mains are within a reasonable distance of the house (West Lancashire Rural Council v. Ogilvy, [1899] 1 Q. B. 377, per CHANNELL, J., at p. 381).

(c) Ibid. As to the right of an owner to demand a water supply, see p. 260, post.

(d) Southend Waterworks Co. v. Howard, supra. The authority is not bound to make the connexion as a condition precedent to the company recovering the rate (ibid., per STEPHEN, J., at p. 218).

(e) As to such recovery, see Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 251; title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 367, 368; as to summary procedure generally, see title MAGISTRATES.

of the local authority, be declared to be private improvement expenses (f).

470. Local authorities may also require common lodging-houses to be supplied with water, if it can be obtained at a reasonable rate (g).

471. City, borough, and urban district councils may be empowered (h) to make bye-laws with respect to keeping water-closets supplied with sufficient water for flushing, and it will be the duty of such councils to enforce them.

City, borough, and urban district councils must (i) cause fire-plugs and all necessary works, machinery, and assistance for securing an efficient supply of water in case of fire to be provided, and maintained, and for this purpose they may enter into any agreement with any water company or person (k).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Special Duties of Rural District Councils.

472. Subject to certain provisions hereinafter mentioned, it is the duty (l) of every rural district council, in addition to the Supply to be available for every house.

Vol. XIX., pp. 589 et seq. No preliminary resolution by the authority as to the necessity of such works need apparently be proved; compare Cuballero v. Lewis (1874), 38 J. P. 614.

(f) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 62. As to such expenses, see ibid., s. 213; titles LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 336; PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 381, 382, 384.

(g) Common Lodging Houses Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 41); see also Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), s. 74; title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 511, 512.

(h) City, borough and urban councils obtain this power by adopting the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), Part III., which, by ibid., s. 23, amends and extends the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 157, and gives this power; see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 416 et seq. Rural district councils may adopt the necessary part of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 23; see ibid., ss. 3, 23 (3), 50; title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 363.

(i) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 66; see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 548, 549. An almost identical provision is to be found in the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 124, but only applies when incorporated in a local Act.

(k) Statutory undertakers must fix and maintain such plugs, if requested by the council (see pp. 304, 305, post); but they frequently fix such plugs without request. In the absence of such request or agreement, the provision above cited does not make the urban district council liable to pay for the maintenance (Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Brentford Local Board, [1894] 2 Q. B. 735, C. A.). The provision, however, imposes a statutory obligation on the council, which can be enforced by indictment or by information by the Attorney-General (ibid., per LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 738). As to fixing marks to indicate position of fire-plugs, and, generally, as to fire appliances, see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 548, 549. Rural districts probably have power to insert plugs or hydrants in their mains under the general powers given by the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 51; see p. 254, post.

general duties above mentioned (a), to see that every occupied dwelling-house within its district has within a reasonable distance an available supply of wholesome water sufficient for the consumption and use for domestic purposes of the inmates of the house (b).

Procedure.

473. The provisions applicable to the enforcing of this duty are the following: Where it appears to a rural district council, on the report of its inspector of nuisances or medical officer of health (c), that any occupied dwelling-house within its district has not such a supply of water within a reasonable distance (d), and the council is of opinion that such supply can be obtained at a reasonable cost not exceeding a capital sum of £8 13s. 4d., or at such other cost, not exceeding £18 (e), as the Local Government Board on the application of the local authority determines in all the circumstances of the case to be reasonable (f), and that the expense of providing the supply ought to be paid by the owner or defrayed as private improvement expenses, certain proceedings may be taken to effect this purpose (g).

(a) Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), ss. 3 (proviso), 13. This Act is construed as one with the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) (Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), s. 1). Its provisions do not repeal the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 62, under which a rural authority may act (Colne Valley Water Co. v. Treharne (1884), 48 J. P. 279). If there are mains in the neighbourhood within a reasonable distance of the house, the procedure should apparently be under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 62 (West Lancashire Rural Council v. Ogilvy, [1899] 1 Q. B. 377).

(b) Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), s. 3. An urban authority may be invested with all or any of the powers and duties under this Act, and such investment may be made either unconditionally or subject to any conditions to be specified by the Local Government Board as to the time, portion of the district, or manner during, at, or in which the powers and duties are to be exercised (ibid., s. 11). For form of report by an inspector of nuisances and medical officer of health of a rural district council that an occupied house within the district is without a sufficient water supply, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 167.

(c) As to these officials, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 273, 275 et seq., 332, 333.

(d) The Local Government Board has not fixed any distance as reasonable. The local authority in determining what is a reasonable distance must have regard to the labour involved in carrying the water by hand, and the possibility of impure water being more easily obtained; see Lumley, Public Health Acts, 8th ed., p. 702.

(e) The words of the Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), s. 3, are "a capital sum the interest on which at the rate of five per centum per annum would amount to twopence per week, or at such other cost not exceeding a capital sum the interest on which at the rate of five per centum per annum would amount to threepence per week."

(f) The Local Government Board has stated that the specified limit of cost must be taken as referring to each individual house, and that when the cost of providing any house considered individually would exceed the limit, the council cannot require a supply to be obtained under the statutory provision, even if it appears that the cost of supply for two or more houses would, if distributed over these houses, be within the specified limit; see Lumley, Public Health Acts, 8th ed., p. 702.

(g) Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), s. 3:

474. These proceedings are as follows:—The council may serve on the owner of the house a notice (h) requiring him within a time specified in the notice, and not exceeding six months from the date of the service thereof, to provide such supply, and to do all such works as may be necessary for that purpose. If the notice is not complied with at the expiration of the time specified, the authority may serve a second notice on the owner informing him that if the requirements of the first notice are not complied with within one month from the date of the service of the second notice, the authority will itself provide such supply, and that the expense of providing the supply will in that case be payable by the owner or as a private improvement expense (i). The council, on cause being shown to its satisfaction why the requirements of such a notice served by them should not be complied with, may withdraw the notice or modify the requirements thereof (k). The owner has a right to object to these requirements on certain specified grounds (l) by a memorial stating his objections and addressed to the authority within twenty-one days after service on him of the second notice. In that case the council cannot proceed with the execution of the works which it might otherwise execute until it has been authorised to execute the same, in certain cases by a court of summary jurisdiction, and in others by the Local Government Board (m).

SECT. 2.
Duties of Local Authorities.

Service of notices.

If at the expiration of one month from the date of the service of the second notice its requirements are not complied with, the council may, subject to the provisions as to its withdrawing or modifying the requirements or to the owner objecting, itself provide the supply, and for that purpose may enter upon the premises and execute all such works as appear to it necessary for obtaining a supply of water for the house (n). Any expenses incurred by the council in providing such supply and doing such works may, when the supply has been provided, be recovered before a court of summary jurisdiction from the owner of the house, or may, at the option of the council, be declared private improvement expenses (a).

Local Authorities.
 Provision of

Where the owners of two or more houses have failed to comply with the requirements of the notices served on them, and the council has power as aforesaid to execute the works for each house, the council may, if it appears to it desirable, and no greater expense would be occasioned thereby, execute the works for the joint supply of water to those houses and apportion the expenses as it deems just (b). Notice of such apportionment must be given forthwith to each of such owners. If any owner objects to the apportionment as unjust, he may, within twenty-one days of service on him of notice thereof, apply to a justice, who may summon the council and the other owners to show cause before a court of summary jurisdiction why the apportionment should not be varied, and the court may either dismiss the application or make such order varying the apportionment as it thinks reasonable (c).

Grounds of objection.

475. The grounds upon which an owner may object to the requirements of a notice as to providing a water supply to his house are: (1) that the supply is not required; (2) that the time limited by the notice for providing the supply is insufficient; (3) that it is impracticable to provide the supply at a reasonable cost; (4) that the authority ought itself to provide a supply of water for the district or contributory place in which the house is situated, or to render the existing supply of water wholesome; or (5) that the whole or part of the expense of providing the supply, or of rendering the existing supply wholesome, ought to be charged on the district or contributory place (d).

 objections.

If the objections stated in the memorial do not include either the fourth or fifth of the above-mentioned grounds, the council may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for an order authorising it to proceed with the works. The court must thereupon summon the owner, and, if satisfied on hearing the case that the objections are not well founded, must make an order authorising the council to proceed with the works in the event of their not being executed by the owner within a time limited by the order (e).

(e) Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), s. 4. An appeal to quarter sessions lies from the order of the court (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 269); see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 369.

If the objections are or include either or both of the fourth or fifth grounds, the council must forward a copy of the memorial to the Local Government Board, which may either cancel the requirement or confirm the same by an order, with or without modifications (f).

SECT. 2.
Duties of Local Authorities.

476. It is also the duty of every rural district council from time to time to take such steps as may be necessary to ascertain the condition of the water supply within its district. The council may pay all reasonable costs and expenses incurred by it in so doing. The council, or any of its officers or any person authorised for that purpose by the council, having reasonable ground for believing that any occupied dwelling-house within the district is without a proper supply of wholesome water sufficient for the consumption and domestic use of the inmates of such house, must be admitted into the premises for which such supply is required, or from which the water supply may be derived, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not such house has such a supply within a reasonable distance (g).

Condition of water supply.

477. A rural district council has also a duty in respect of the water supply to dwelling-houses in its district erected after the 4th July, 1878 (h), or which after that date are pulled down to or below the ground floor and rebuilt. The owner of such a house may not occupy it or permit it to be occupied, unless and until he has obtained from the council a certificate that there is provided, within a reasonable distance of the house, such an available supply of wholesome water as appears to such authority, on the report of its inspector of nuisances or of its medical officer of health, to be sufficient for the consumption and use for domestic purposes of the inmates of the house (i). If the council refuses to grant such certificate, the owner may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for an order authorising the occupation of the house notwithstanding the refusal of the certificate. The court must then summon the council, and if, on hearing the case, the court is of opinion that the certificate ought to have been granted, such order may be made (k).

If the Board confirms the requirement, it must issue an order authorising the council, subject to any modification the Board may prescribe, to execute the works in the event of such works not being executed by the owner within a time limited by the order. Such order may, if the Board considers it equitable, apportion the expense of providing the supply between the owner of the house and the council, or between the owner and any other person or persons (ibid.). If the Board cancels the requirements upon the grounds mentioned in the fourth objection, the memorial is deemed to have been a complaint of default made to the Board under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 299 (Public Health (Water) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 25), s. 4); as to such a complaint, see pp. 246, 247, ante.

SECT. 3.—Powers of Local Authorities to Supply Water.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

General
powers.

478. Subject to certain restrictions which are intended to prevent undue competition with statutory undertakings (l), any borough or urban district council may provide its district or any part thereof, and any rural authority may provide its district or any contributory place (m) therein, or any part of such contributory place, with a supply of water proper and sufficient for public and private purposes (n). For those purposes, or any of them, such councils have powers of constructing and maintaining (o) and of taking on lease or hiring waterworks (a), and in certain cases of purchasing waterworks (b), and the rights, powers, and privileges of water companies (c), and they may contract with any person for a supply of water (d). They have also powers to maintain or close public wells and pumps (e).

Joint boards.

Two or more urban or rural districts or any of them may be formed into a united district for the purpose of procuring a common

Water.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Construction and Acquisition of Works.

479. To provide its district or part thereof with a supply of water a local authority may construct and maintain waterworks, dig wells, and do any other necessary acts (h). Before the authority can exercise these powers, it must possess or acquire land for the purpose, and in some cases it may be necessary, in addition, to acquire water rights (i). Land may be acquired by agreement (k), or compulsorily by means of a provisional order granted by the Local Government Board and confirmed by Parliament (l). Water rights not incidental to such land may be acquired by agreement (m); but provisional orders authorising their compulsory purchase are not issued by the Local Government Board (n). and the promotion of a Bill for a local Act is, therefore, necessary if powers of compulsory purchase are required (o). Nothing in the Public Health Acts (p) is to be construed as authorising a local authority to injuriously affect (q) any reservoir, canal, river, or

There is a power to construct certain works in the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), s. 121, but this provision only applies where it is incorporated by a local Act. (m) A local authority is expressly empowered to buy up any water mill, dam, or weir which interferes with the supply of water to its district (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 175); and, with the necessary consents, it may do acts injuriously affecting streams (ibid., ss. 327, 332). As to rights of interference with the flow of water generally, see title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, pp. 424 et seq., post. As to acquiring land subject to a tenant's right of water supply, see Key v. Neath Rural District Council (1906), 71 J. P. 57, C. A.

(n) Such orders were at one time issued; but the Board was advised by the law officers of the Crown that it was not authorised to do so, by reason of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 327, 332 (Report of Select Committee of House of Commons on the Public Health Act (1875) Amendment Bill (1878), R. stream, or the feeders thereof, or the supply, quality, or fall of water contained therein, in cases where any body of persons or person would, independently of such Acts, be entitled by law to prevent or be relieved against such injury, unless the local authority first obtains the consent (r) in writing of such persons or person (s).

480. A local authority may not construct any waterworks (t) within the limits of supply (u) of any water company (a) empowered to supply water by Act of or order confirmed by Parliament, if and so long as any such company is able and willing to supply water proper and sufficient for the purposes for which it is required by the local authority (b). This condition does not, however, prevent a local authority constructing works to obtain water for its own provided, although no damage is caused, is injuriously affecting (Roberts v. Gwyrfaei District Council, [1899] 2 Ch. 608, C. A.); and so, probably, would be pollution by sewage, but that might, apart from the statutory provision, give a cause of action (Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Rail. Co. v. Workson Board of Health (1857), 23 Beav. 198). As to intercepting percolating water, see Kibble v. Chipping Norton Urban District Council (1901), Times, 27th February; title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, pp. 430, 431, post. The remedy for such interference is by an action for injunction and damages, and not for compensation; see the last-mentioned cases; Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Shugar (1871), 6 Ch. App. 483, better reported 24 L. T. 402; Jordeson v. Sutton, Southcoates and Drypool Gas Co., [1899] 2 Ch. 217, C. (t) For the definition of "waterworks," see p. 254, ante. As to works to supply sea water, see Shaw's Water Co. v. Greenock Magistrates etc. (1855), 2 Macq. 151, H. L.

(u) As to the limits of supply of a water company, see pp. 276, 277, post.

(a) The expression "water company" is defined, as meaning, if not inconsistent with the context, "any person or body of persons corporate or unincorporate supplying or who may hereafter supply water for his or their own profit" (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 4). A municipal corporation supplying water for its own profit would be such a company (Wolverhampton Corporation v. Bilston Commissioners, [1891] 1 Ch. 315, affirmed on another point, [1891] W. N. 56, C. A.).

(b) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 52. As to the ceasing of the powers of a company authorised by provisional order, see pp. 273, 274, post, and by special Act, p. 277, post.

use (c), nor does it prevent the authority from enlarging and improving works of a substantial nature already belonging to it (d); but it does prevent the authority laying pipes for water supply in a new area added to its district (e). Before commencing to construct waterworks within such limits, the local authority must give written notice to every such company within whose limits of supply the authority is desirous of supplying water, stating the purposes for which, and, so far as may be practicable, the extent to which water is required by the authority. Any difference as to whether the water which any such company is able and willing to lay on is proper and sufficient for the purposes for which it is required (f), or whether such purposes are reasonable, or as to the terms of supply if and so far as the charges of the company are not regulated by Parliament, must be settled by arbitration (g).

(c) As, for instance, for their sewage disposal works (West Surrey Water Co. v. Chertsey Union Guardians, [1894] 3 Ch. 513). The condition does not apparently apply to works for providing a pure supply of water to a public well, cistern or reservoir; see pp. 264, 265, post.

(d) Cleveland Water Co. v. Redcar Local Board, [1895] 1 Ch. 168, approved in Huddersfield Corporation v. Ravensthorpe Urban Council, [1897] 2 Ch. 121, C. A.

(e) See Huddersfield Corporation v. Ravensthorpe Urban Council, supra, where the order adding the area made no provision for water supply. As to such alterations of area, and as to whether such a provision could be made, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 377. As to a clause restricting the laying of mains as distinguished from service pipes, see Whittington Gas Light and Coke Co., Ltd. v. Chesterfield Gas and Water Board, [1914] 1 Ch. 270; affirmed, [1914] 2 Ch. 146, C. A.

(f) The company must have both the power to supply and the water (Richmond Waterworks Co. and Southwark and Vauxhall Waterworks Co. v. Richmond (Surrey) Vestry (1876), 3 Ch. D. 82). If a company with the necessary powers is taking steps to supply the water within a reasonable time, it appears to be ready and willing (Newhaven and Seaford Water Co. v. Newhaven District Local Board (1882), 72 L. T. Jo. 226; Bognor Water Co. v. Bognor Local Board (1894), 70 L. T. 402). In the case of new companies, or companies and corporations whose limits of supply are extended, a clause is commonly inserted removing the above condition, if after so many years from the passing of the special Act the company is not furnishing, or prepared on demand to furnish, a sufficient supply of water; see Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 24.

(g) Public Health Act 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 52. The arbitration is held in manner provided by that Act, as to which see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 367. As to the matters over which an arbitrator has jurisdiction, see Re Yeaton Local Board and Yeaton Waterworks Co. (1888), 59 L. T. 844, per KAY, J., at p. 845, reversed upon a technical point (1889), 41 Ch. D. 52, C. A. (h) That is, the powers under the Public Health Acts (see p. 254, ante; title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 361, note (a)); but an authority may be empowered to do so by a local Act. For further provisions with respect to the security of reservoirs, see Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), ss. 3—11; pp. 295 et seq., post. These provisions apply to local authorities supplying water under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), being incorporated therein by ibid., s. 57.

conditions. The authority must, at least two months before commencing to construct such a reservoir, give notice of the intended work by advertisement in one or more of the local newspapers circulating within the district in which the reservoir is to be constructed (i). Any person affected by the intended work and objecting thereto may serve notice in writing of such objection on the local authority at any time within the said two months, and in such case the local authority must not commence the intended work without the sanction of the Local Government Board, granted with or without modification of the work after local inquiry, unless the objection is withdrawn. The Board may, on the application of the local authority, appoint an inspector to make the inquiry (k).

waterworks.

482. For the purpose of supplying water to its district or part thereof, a local authority may take on lease or hire any waterworks (l), and any water company may lease its waterworks to any local authority (m).

Purchase of waterworks.

A local authority may also for the like purpose, with the sanction of the Local Government Board, purchase any waterworks or any water or right to take or convey water, either within or without its district, and any rights, powers, and privileges of any water company (l). The directors of any water company, in pursuance of certain resolutions (n) passed for the purpose, may sell and transfer to any local authority, on such terms as may be agreed on between the company and the local authority, all the rights, powers and privileges, and all or any of the waterworks, premises, and other property of the company, but subject to all liabilities to which the same are subject at the time of such purchase (o).

The inspector must report to the Board thereon, and on receiving such report the Board may make an order disallowing, or allowing with such modifications, if any, as it deems necessary, the intended work (ibid.). (n) In the case of a company registered under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 69) (see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 33 et seq.), the resolution must be a special resolution of the members passed in manner provided by that Act, and in the case of any other company (see ibid., pp. 674 et seq.), a resolution passed by three-fourths in number and value of the members present, either personally or by proxy, at a meeting specially convened with notice of the business to be transacted (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 63).

(o) Ibid., s. 63. Debenture-holders of a company authorised by provisional order to carry on a water undertaking are not entitled to an order for sale of the undertaking (Blaker v. Herts and Beds. Waterworks Co. (1889), 41 Ch. D. 399; see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 380, 738).

Agreements for purchase sometimes require the sanction of Parliament by local Act (p). The compulsory acquisition of water undertakings by local authorities or joint boards at prices to be fixed by arbitration is frequently sanctioned by Parliament in local Acts (q).

(p) As to the construction of such an agreement, see Ward v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co. (1871), L. R. 13 Eq. 243.

(q) The practice of Parliament in regard to the compulsory purchase of water undertakings is similar to that in regard to gas undertakings; see title GAS, Vol. XV., pp. 321, 322. When the water undertaking extends beyond the district of a local authority, a like clause is commonly inserted as in the corresponding case of a gas undertaking; see ibid. As to the basis of calculation of the price, see Stockton and Middlesbrough Water Board v. Kirkleatham Local Board, [1893] A. C. 444, where the special Act was not for the purchase of "the undertaking," but of the "mains, pipes, and fittings"; the basis would have been different if the word "undertaking" had been used. See, generally, the cases cited in title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 322, note (t); Re London County Council and London Street Tramways Co., [1894] 2 Q. B. 189, 199, 221, C. A., affirmed, [1894] A. 484. A local authority constructing or purchasing any water-works must provide and keep therein a supply of pure and wholesome water (g); but this duty is performed if the water in the mains is pure and wholesome, even although it is of such a nature that it becomes contaminated in passing through the service pipes (h).

Every owner or occupier of a dwelling-house within the area of supply, who has laid the necessary communication pipes and paid or tendered the water rate payable in respect thereof, is entitled to demand and receive from the undertakers a sufficient supply of water for his domestic purposes (i). A local authority may, if it thinks fit, supply water from its works to any public baths or washhouses, or for trading or manufacturing purposes, on such terms and conditions as may be agreed on between the local authority and the persons desirous of being so supplied (k).

In a contract between an urban and rural district council as to such supply, it is not necessary to specify a pecuniary penalty (Southill Urban Council v. Wakefield Rural Council, supra).

(p) See title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 361, note (a).

(q) See title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 280 et seq., 336. A rural district council cannot, however, at the expense of the rates, promote a Bill to obtain a water supply (Oleverton v. St. Germain's Union Rural Sanitary Authority (1886), 56 L. J. (Q. B.) 83); but such a Bill if passed would commonly contain a clause authorising such expenditure.

not defrayed out of water rates or rents (s), are deemed to be special expenses (t). If the supply is to part only of a contributory place, such excess of expenditure is to be raised as special expenses on the whole contributory place (u).

Limited owners may contribute to the expenses of a district council for the purpose of supplying water to any lands of such owner, and in certain cases charge the same on such lands (w).

488. The expenses of joint boards are defrayed out of a common fund, contributed by the component districts or contributory places, in proportion to the rateable value of the property in each district or contributory place, to be determined according to the valuation list, or provision may be made in the order constituting the board (a).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Water Rates and Rents.

Power to charge rate.

489. Where a local authority supplies water to any premises, it may (b) charge in respect of such supply a water rate (c), to be assessed on the net annual value (d) of the premises ascertained in the manner prescribed with respect to general district rates (e); in respect to the payment and recovery of such rates the authority has the powers given by the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 (f) and 1863 (g). The authority may also enter into agreements for supplying water on such terms as may be agreed on between it and the persons receiving the supply, and has the same powers for

P. 149), and also the expenses in connexion with the closing of wells, pumps etc.; see pp. 264 et seq., post. As to special expenses, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 335.

Powers of Local Authorities to Supply
Water.

490. Where a rural district council has provided a standpipe or standpipes for the supply of water to any portion of its district, it may recover water rates or water rents from the owner or occupier of every dwelling-house within 200 feet of any such standpipe, in the same manner in all respects as if the supply had been given on the premises. No such rate or rent can, however, be recovered from the owner or occupier of a dwelling-house whose inmates do not use the water from the standpipes, if such dwelling-house has within a reasonable distance and from other sources a supply of wholesome water sufficient for the consumption and use of the inmates of the house (i).

Standpipes

districts.

491. Where a local authority supplies water in any urban district or in any contributory place (j), and an application is made to the authority by any ten persons rated to the relief of the poor in such urban district, or by any five persons in such contributory place (j), to charge water rates or water rents in respect of the water so supplied, the authority must exercise the powers above mentioned of charging water rates or rents in respect of all water supplied by it in such urban district or in such contributory place (k).

Duty to charge.

492. Local authorities may in their discretion grant and furnish supplies of water for lodging-houses provided under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (l), Part III., either with or without charge or on such other favourable terms as they think fit (m).

Lodging-houses.

493. A local authority may agree with any person to supply water by measure (n), and as to the payment to be made, in the form of rent or otherwise, for every meter provided by it. The authority must at all times at its own expense keep all meters and other instruments for measuring water let by it for hire to any person in proper order for correctly registering the supply of water, and

In the Oxford or Cambridge district the local authority may supply water to any hall, college or premises of the University within such district, on such terms with respect to the mode of paying for such supply as may from time to time be agreed on between such University, or any hall or college thereof, and the local authority (ibid., s. 67). in default of its so doing such person is not liable to pay rent for the same during such time as the default continues. The local authority for these purposes is entitled to have access to and be at liberty at all reasonable times to remove, test, and replace any such meter or other instrument (o). The register of the meter or other instrument for measuring water is prima facie evidence of the quantity of water consumed. A dispute between the authority and the consumer as to the quantity consumed is determined, on the application of either party, by a court of summary jurisdiction (p).

Any person is liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s. who wilfully or by culpable negligence injures or suffers to be injured any meter or fittings belonging to a local authority, or who fraudulently alters the index to any meter, or prevents any meter from duly registering the quantity of water supplied, or fraudulently abstracts or uses water of the local authority (q).

494. The provisions commonly inserted in local water Acts with respect to the waste and misuse of water supplied by the undertakers are applicable also to local authorities supplying water (r).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Wells, Pumps etc.

495. All public cisterns, pumps, wells, reservoirs (s), conduits, aqueducts, and works used for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the district of any local authority existing on the 11th August, 1875 (t), became on that date vested in and under the

(o) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 58. Power to let meters for hire, and also other instruments and apparatus, with a provision protecting them from distress, is conferred on local authorities by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 14. There is also a further power to inspect the same given by ibid., s. 15. As to these provisions, see pp. 317, 318, post. The whole of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), is incorporated in the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 57, for the purpose of enabling a local authority to supply water.

(p) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 59. The court may order the costs of the proceedings to be paid by either party, and its decision is final and binding (ibid.).

(q) Ibid., s. 60. The existence of artificial means under the control of the consumer for causing any such alteration, prevention, obstruction or use is evidence that the consumer has fraudulently effected the same (ibid.). The authority may, in addition to the penalty, recover the amount of any damage sustained, and thus and the right to recover a penalty are without prejudice to any other right or remedy of the local authority (ibid.). Such other right or remedy may exist under the agreement or under the incorporated provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17) and 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93). Water supplied by measure may also be the subject of larceny (Ferens v. O'Brien (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 21); see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., p. 643.

(r) These are the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 54—60, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), ss. 16—20, made applicable by the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 57. As to these provisions, see pp. 321 et seq., post. For form of notice by a local authority to a person supplied with water to provide or repair a cistern, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 180.

By reason of this vesting the local authority is entitled to bring an action in respect of interference with any of the same (x); but such vesting does not enable the authority to grant a licence to persons to bottle and sell such water (a). The local authority may cause these wells and cisterns and works to be maintained and plentifully supplied with pure and wholesome water, and may substitute, maintain, and plentifully supply with pure and wholesome water other such works equally convenient (b); the authority may also, subject to the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875 (c), construct any other such works for supplying water for the gratuitous use of any inhabitants who choose to carry the same away, not for sale, but for their own use (d).

496. When any person represents (e) to a local authority that within its district the water in any well, tank, or cistern, public or private, or supplied from any public pump, and used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes, or for manufacturing drinks for the use of man, is so polluted as to be injurious to health, the authority may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction (f) for an order to remedy the same. The court must thereupon Archibald*, supra, per Lord BLACKBURN, at p. 516); as to such restrictions, see pp. 256, 257, ante. If a landowner properly draws away the water, the authority may not trespass in order to obtain a supply (Edwards v. Jolliffe, [1877] W. N. 120). summon the owner or occupier of the premises to which the well, tank, or cistern belongs, if it be private, and in the case of a public well, tank, cistern, or pump, any person alleged in the application to be interested in it (g). The court may, if it sees fit, cause the water complained of to be analysed at the cost of the local authority, and may either dismiss the application or make an order directing the well, tank, cistern, or pump to be permanently or temporarily closed, or the water to be used for certain purposes only, or such other order as appears to the court to be requisite to prevent injury to the health of persons who may drink the water. If the person on whom such an order is made fails to comply therewith, the court may, on the application of the local authority, authorise the authority to do whatever may be necessary in the execution of the order, and any expenses incurred by the authority may be recovered from the person on whom the order is made (h).

SECT. 4.—Powers of Parish Councils.

Utilisation of wells etc.

497. A parish council has power to utilise any well, spring, or stream within its parish and to provide facilities for obtaining water therefrom, but so as not to interfere with the rights of any corporation or person (i). A parish council cannot, however, take proceedings in its own name to enforce a right of the inhabitants of the parish to the use of such well or spring (k), and a parish council is not authorised to acquire, otherwise than by agreement, any land for the purpose of any supply of water (l). The parish council may, however, complain in certain cases to the county council if the local authority makes default in regard to the water supply of the parish (m).

SECT. 5.—Powers and Duties of Metropolitan Local Authorities.

Acquisition

certain purposes.

498. The London County Council (a) and metropolitan borough councils (b) have power to purchase, or take on lease for such term as they think fit, the whole or any part of any streams or springs of water or any rights therein which it appears to them necessary to acquire and use for the purpose of cleansing sewers and drains and

(h) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 70. These expenses are recoverable before a court of summary jurisdiction (ibid.). Any expenses incurred by a rural district council, and not so recovered by it, are special expenses (ibid.).

(i) Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 8 (1). This power does not, however, derogate from the obligation of a district council with respect to a supply of water (ibid., s. 8 (3)). the other purposes (c) of the Metropolis Management Acts (d), or any land which is deemed by them advisable to purchase or take on lease for the purpose of drawing or obtaining water from springs, or by sinking wells, and for making and providing reservoirs, tanks, aqueducts, watercourses and other works, or for any other purpose connected with the works for obtaining such supply of water. They may not, however, use or permit to be used any such works for the purpose of carrying water by supply pipes into any house or factory for domestic, manufacturing, or commercial purposes (e).

SECT. 4.
Powers and
Duties of Metropolitan
Local Authorities.

499. An occupied house in the Metropolis without a proper and sufficient supply of water is a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily and, if a dwelling-house, is deemed unfit for human habitation (f). Notice in writing of the water being lawfully cut off from any inhabited dwelling-house for non-payment of water rate or other cause must be given to the sanitary authority of the district within twenty-four hours by the Metropolitan Water Board (g).

Insufficient
supply.

500. Every sanitary authority (h) must make bye-laws for securing the cleanliness and freedom from pollution of tanks, cisterns and other receptacles used for the storing of water used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes, or for manufacturing drink for the use of man (i).

Bye-laws.

501. All public cisterns, reservoirs, wells, fountains, pumps, and works existing on the 1st January, 1892 (k), used for the gratuitous supply of water to the inhabitants of the district of any sanitary authority (l), and not vested in any person or authority

In the case of houses let in tenements a separate supply must be provided on each story unless it can be shown that such supply is not reasonably necessary (London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxv.), s. 74). The absence of certain water fittings from premises is also such a nuisance (Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 2 (1) (f)); see title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., p. 539.

(g) Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 49. Failure to comply renders the Board liable to a penalty not exceeding £10, and it is the duty of the sanitary authority to take proceedings (ibid.). Cutting off temporarily for the purpose of stopping a leak is probably not such a stoppage (Young v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. (1893), 69 L. T. 144). As to cutting off generally, see pp. 318 et seq., 352, post.

other than the sanitary authority, were vested in and became under the control of the sanitary authority. The sanitary authority may maintain them and plentifully supply them with pure and wholesome water, or may substitute, maintain, and plentifully supply with pure and wholesome water other such works equally convenient, and may maintain and supply with water as aforesaid other public cisterns, reservoirs, wells, fountains, pumps, and other such works within their district (m). The sanitary authority (a) may provide and maintain public wells, pumps, and drinking fountains in such convenient and suitable situations as it deems proper (b).

Sanitary authorities (a) in London have also the like powers as regards the closing of polluted wells, tanks, cisterns, and public pumps as have local authorities outside London, and these powers extend also to such wells, tanks, cisterns or pumps as are likely to be so polluted as to be injurious or dangerous to health (c).

Part II.—Grant of Special Statutory Powers.

SECT. 1.—In General.

Undertakers.

502. Companies and persons carrying on, or desirous of carrying on, a water undertaking usually find it necessary to obtain powers from Parliament in addition to those which they possess under the general law (d). Subject to conditions, Parliament grants powers to break up streets, to acquire land and water rights compulsorily, to charge and recover rates and rents, to prevent waste and misuse of the water and to secure it from pollution (e). Parliament also grants privileges protecting the undertakers from undue competition (f). These powers can be obtained by a local

(a) As to the sanitary authorities, see note (h), p. 267, ante.

(b) Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 51 (2). If any person wilfully damages any of the above-mentioned wells, pumps or fountains, or any part thereof, he is required to pay to the sanitary authority the expenses of repairing or reinstating such well, fountain, pump or part thereof, in addition to any punishment to which he is liable (ibid., s. 51 (3)). As to penalties and recovery of such payment before a court of summary jurisdiction, see ibid., ss. 116, 117.

(c) Ibid., s. 54, which is almost identical with the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 70; see p. 265, ante. The Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 54, provides that the court, before making any order, must hear the owner or occupier of the premises to which the particular well etc. belongs, if it is private, and, if it is public, the person interested must be given an opportunity of being heard. This duty of the court is probably implied in the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 70.

Act (g), and certain of them by provisional order confirmed by Parliament (h). SECT. I.
In General.

503. Local authorities requiring extension of their powers may also obtain them from Parliament. Provisional orders can be obtained for the compulsory acquisition of land (i) or for certain variations of local Acts (k); but in order to acquire or interfere with water rights a local Act is necessary (l). A Bill for such an Act can be promoted by borough, urban district, and county councils at the expense of the rates, subject to the provisions of the Borough Funds Acts, 1872 and 1903 (m). A rural district authority cannot pay out of the rates the expenses of promoting a Bill, even to acquire water rights (n). Local authorities.

504. Bills are frequently passed for constituting a water board for the areas of various local authorities, and for giving the board powers to acquire the waterworks of such authorities or of the companies supplying water within such area, and to construct other works, and generally to carry on the work of a water undertaking (o). Water boards.

505. Many of the Bills which come annually before Parliament are promoted by existing companies or local authorities for the purpose of extending the powers contained in Acts previously passed at their instance (p). The Local Government Board may also alter and amend local Acts relating to water supply by local authorities by means of provisional order (q). Extension of powers.

SECT. 2.—By Local Act.

506. Local Bills for making, maintaining, varying, extending, or enlarging any waterwork belong to the second class into which Standing orders applicable.

ment protects statutory companies from unreasonable competition by other statutory bodies, and gives them the right to be heard against a private Bill on the ground of competition (Standing Orders of the House of Commons (Private Business), 1913, No. 129).

Sec. 2.
By Local Act.

private Bills are divided in both Houses of Parliament for the purpose of the standing orders relative to private Bills (r).

In addition to the standing orders generally applicable to that class, various orders apply more particularly to waterworks (s).

Notices.

507. Before the application for a Bill to abstract water from any stream for the purpose of supplying any waterwork, notice must be given to certain owners, lessees and occupiers of mills and works who would be affected (t).

Deposit of maps.

Where under the powers of any Bill any water may be taken, collected or impounded for the purpose of a water supply, the promoters must, on or before the 30th November, deposit at the office of the Local Government Board, and also at the office of the Clerk of the Parliaments (u), an ordnance map on the scale of six inches to the mile, showing by a distinguishing mark the position of each reservoir, well, conduit, or other work proposed to be authorised by the Bill; where the proposed source of supply is a river, stream, or lake, an ordnance map on the scale of not less than one inch to the mile, showing by a clearly marked line the catchment area or gathering ground from which the waters are derived, must be deposited (w).

Deposit of
copy of Bill.

A printed copy of every Bill relating to water must be deposited at the office of the Board of Trade on or before the 18th December in the case of Bills before the House of Commons, and the 21st December in the case of Bills before the House of Lords (x).

As to notices by advertisement of intention to divert water from an existing cut, canal, reservoir, aqueduct, or navigation, see Standing Orders of the House of Lords (Private Business), 1913, No. 7; Standing Orders of the House of Commons (Private Business), 1913, No. 7.

(u) As to the Clerk of the Parliaments, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 630.

(w) Standing Orders of the House of Lords (Private Business), 1913, No. 25c. Where under the powers of any Bill it is proposed to supply with water any area not previously included within the promoters' limits of supply, the promoters must similarly deposit an ordnance map on the scale of one inch to the mile showing respectively the existing limits of supply and the area proposed to be added thereto (ibid.). As to the deposit of plans and sections, generally, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 732, 733.

(x) Standing Orders of the House of Lords (Private Business), 1913, No. 33; Standing Orders of the House of Commons (Private Business), 1913, No. 33. If the Bill proposes to make, extend or enlarge any dam, weir or obstruction to the passage of fish in any river or estuary, or the abstraction of water from any river, deposit must also be made at the office of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries and at the office of any fishery board having jurisdiction over the river or estuary (ibid.). As to amended Bills, see title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., p. 757, note (n); as to the deposit of bills generally, see ibid., pp. 733, 734.

The municipal or other local authority of any town or district alleging in its petition that such town or district may be injuriously affected by the provisions of any Bill relating to the water supply or the raising of capital for such purpose (a), or the council of any administrative county alleging in its petition that such administrative county or any part thereof may be injuriously affected by the provisions of any Bill relating to the water supply of any town or district, whether situated within or without such county, is entitled to be heard against such Bill before a select committee (b).

By Local Act.
Opposition to Bill.

Any owner, lessee or occupier in the district of any conservancy or other authority charged with the control of river or other waters alleging in his petition against the Bill that under its provisions any water or water supply of which he may legally avail himself will be diminished or injuriously affected may be admitted to be heard against the Bill or any part of it (c).

In the case of every water Bill whereby it is proposed to impound or abstract the whole or any part of the water of any river or stream, the committee on the Bill must inquire into the expediency of making provision, so far as may be practicable, for giving a flow of water in compensation for the water so impounded or abstracted, and that the whole or a minimum amount of such compensation water be given in a continuous flow throughout the twenty-four hours of every day (d).

Abstraction
from rivers.

508. In every Bill by which an existing water company is authorised to raise additional capital provision must be made for the offer of such capital by public auction or tender, at the best price which can be obtained, unless the committee on the Bill reports that such provision ought not to be required, with the reasons on which the opinion of the committee is founded (e).

Increase of capital.

SECT. 3.—By Provisional Order.

509. Any company, companies, or person (f) may obtain a provisional order under the Gas and Water Works Facilities Act,

(f) This does not include local authorities. In respect of gas undertakings, they are expressly included by the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 161: see title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 312.

1870 (g), for all or any of the following purposes :—(1) to construct or to maintain and continue waterworks and works connected therewith, or to supply water in any district within which there is not an existing company, corporation, body of commissioners, or person empowered by Act of Parliament to construct such works and to supply water (h); (2) to raise additional capital for any such purpose; (3) to enable two or more companies or persons duly authorised to supply water in any district or in adjoining districts to enter into agreements jointly to furnish such supply or to amalgamate their undertakings; and (4) to authorise two or more companies supplying water in any district or in adjoining districts to supply water and to enter into agreements jointly to furnish such supply, and to amalgamate their undertakings (i). These purposes, or any one or more of them, are deemed to be included in the term "water undertaking" (j), and the term "undertakers" includes any such company, companies, or person (k).

Such provisional orders may be obtained for any district, exclusive of the Metropolis (l), and any water company being empowered as aforesaid may apply for these facilities within their own districts respectively (i).

Procedure.

510. The provisional order is made by the Board of Trade (m), after certain consents have been obtained (n), certain notices given, and certain documents deposited (o), and after hearing and considering objections, and, if necessary, holding an inquiry (p).

(g) 33 & 34 Vict. c. 70, amended by the Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 89). The area of the Metropolis as defined by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120) (see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., p. 393, note (h)), is expressly excluded; see Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 70), s. 15; Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 89), s. 15.

(h) If the existing company or local authority consents, the order may be made; see, for example, Chelsham and Woldingham Water Order: Water Orders Confirmation Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. xciv.).

(m) Ibid., s. 7; or by any other Government department substituted by Order in Council (ibid., s. 14). The power to make a provisional order may be transferred to the council of a county or a county borough, or to such councils generally (Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 10; Local Government (Transfer of Powers) Act, 1903 (3 Edw. 7, c. 15)); see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 379.

(n) Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 70), s. 4. The consents are the same as in the case of an order for a gas undertaking by a company; see title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 313.

(o) The notices are the same as in the case of an order for a gas undertaking by a company, with the substitution of "water" for gas (see title GAS, Vol. XV., pp. 313, 314), and with the following additions: Where it is proposed to abstract water from any stream for any waterwork the undertakers must give notice in writing of their intention to make such

511. The provisional order must not contain any provision for empowering the undertakers, or any other person, to acquire lands otherwise than by agreement, or to acquire any lands, even by agreement, except to an extent therein limited (q). Where the order authorises a water undertaking, the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 (r) and 1863 (s), must be incorporated therewith, save where they are expressly varied or excepted (t).

The provisional order when made must be published (a), and it has no operation until confirmed by Parliament (b).

512. The powers granted by the provisional order to the undertakers for executing works or otherwise in relation thereto cease in certain cases, except as to so much thereof as is completed, unless the time is prolonged by the special direction of the Board of Trade. These cases are: (1) if the undertakers do not within three years from the date of the order, or within any shorter period prescribed therein, complete the works; or (2) if within one year from the date of the order, or within such shorter time as is prescribed in the order, the application to the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees and occupiers of all mills and manufactories or other works using the waters of such stream for a distance of twenty miles below the point at which such water is intended to be abstracted, such distance to be measured along the course of such stream, unless such waters shall within a less distance than twenty miles fall into or unite with any navigable stream, and then only to the owners or reputed owners, lessees or reputed lessees and occupiers of such mills and manufactories as aforesaid which shall be situated between the point at which such water is proposed to be abstracted and the point at which such waters shall fall into or unite with such navigable stream. Such notice must state the name, if any, by which the stream is known at the point at which such water is to be immediately abstracted, and also the parish in which such point is situated, and the time and place of deposit of the plans and sections required to be deposited (Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 70), s. 5 (2)). A complete list of these mill-owners etc., and a certified copy of the notice served on them, must be deposited at the Board of Trade on the 28th December (Board of Trade Rules, 1886, r. 11 (Stat. R. & O. Rev., Vol. VI., Gas, p. 1)). The plans and sections to be deposited on or before the 30th November with respect to waterworks are such plans and sections as would be required by the Standing Orders for the time being of either House of Parliament if the promoters, instead of applying for a provisional order, were proceeding by private Bill (ibid., r. 9); see p. 270, ante; title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 732, 733.

works are not substantially commenced; or (8) if the works are commenced, but, whilst the powers to carry them on exist, are suspended without a reason sufficient in the opinion of the Board of Trade to warrant such suspension (c). The Board of Trade may, by a further provisional order, from time to time revoke, amend, extend, or vary any such provisional order (d).

SECT. 4.—Terms on which Powers Granted.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

Statutory
provisions.

513. The terms upon which Parliament usually grants powers to construct and carry on water undertakings are contained in the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 (e) and 1863 (f). Since the date of these Acts a further set of provisions, which are frequently inserted in special Acts relating to waterworks, have been formulated. These have not been consolidated by statute, but are for the most part to be found in the Model Bills and Clauses (g).

SUB-SECT. 2.—The Waterworks Clauses Acts.

Waterworks
Clauses Act,
1847.

514. The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (h), extends only to such waterworks as may be authorised by an Act of Parliament passed after the 23rd April, 1847 (i), which declares that the Act is incorporated therewith. The Act authorising the construction of waterworks and incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (h), is in that Act termed the special Act (k). All the clauses, save so far as

(c) Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 70), s. 11. A statement in writing by the Board of Trade to the effect that such works have not been completed, or that the works have not been substantially commenced, or that they have been suspended without sufficient reason, is for the purposes of this provision conclusive evidence of such non-completion, non-commencement or suspension (ibid.). The Board of Trade Rules, 1886, made pursuant to the Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 89), contain directions for obtaining prolongation of the time for the commencement or completion of the work authorised.

(d) Gas and Water Works Facilities Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 89), s. 13. The procedure as to application, making and confirmation is the same as for the original provisional order (ibid.); see title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 317.

(e) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17.

(f) 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93. If land is authorised to be acquired, the Lands Clauses Acts (see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 12 et seq.) are also incorporated. As to incorporation in provisional orders, see note (q), p. 273, ante, and in the special Act, see notes (p), (q), p. 281, post. For the principles of construction to be applied to private Acts relating to waterworks, see Bristol Guardians v. Bristol Waterworks Co., [1914] A. C. 379.

(g) These are published annually under the authority of the Chairman of Committees of the House of Lords, and are added to or varied according to the practice of Parliament. They include a Model Water Bill suitable for a corporation and sundry other clauses applicable to water undertakings. As to the provisions suitable to a company, see the Model Gas Bill.

(h) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17.

(i) The date of the passing of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17).

they are expressly varied or excepted by the special Act, apply to the undertaking thereby authorised, so far as the same are applicable thereto (l).

The Act may be incorporated either as a whole or in part. For the purpose of incorporating part only, the Act has been divided into groups of clauses dealing with particular matters, each group having introductory headings (m). In order to incorporate part enabling persons interested and the public generally to have access thereto, and to make extracts or copies therefrom. Copies to which the public has access must be kept at the principal office of business of the undertakers and in the office of the clerk of the peace or county council of the county in which the undertaking is situated (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 90, 91). These provisions are practically identical with those in the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 45; see title Gas, Vol. XV., p. 319.

(l) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 1. These clauses, together with the clauses of every other Act which are incorporated therewith, form part of the special Act, and are construed therewith as forming one Act (ibid.). In cases to which these clauses are not directly applicable serious difficulties of construction may arise, as the Acts are construed strictly as against the promoters; see Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Water Co. (1904), 20 T. L. R. 687, H. L., per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at pp. 689, 690, and per Lord HALSBURY, L.C., at p. 692. "Undertaking" as used in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), means the waterworks and the works connected therewith by the special Act authorised to be constructed; "the undertakers" means the persons by the special Act authorised to construct the waterworks; "the lands and streams" means the lands and streams of water authorised by the special Act to be taken or used for the purposes thereof (ibid., s. 2); the word "prescribed," used in reference to any matter, is construed to refer to such matter as the same is prescribed or provided for in the special Act, and the sentence in which such word occurs is construed as if, instead of the word "prescribed," the expression "prescribed for that purpose in the special Act" had been used (ibid.). These definitions apply to the construction of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), and must be distinguished from those in ibid., s. 3, which apply to both that and the special Act; see Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Water Co., supra, per Lord MACNAGHTEN, at p. 689. In the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), the special Act, and any Act incorporated therewith, certain words and expressions have meanings assigned to them, unless there is something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction; "streams" includes springs, brooks, rivers and other running waters; "the waterworks" means the waterworks and the works connected therewith by the special Act authorised to be constructed; "water rate" includes any rent, reward or payment to be made to the undertakers for a supply of water; the word "justice" means justice of the peace acting for the place where the matter requiring the cognisance of any such justice arises, and, if such matter arises in respect of lands or streams situated not wholly in one jurisdiction, means a justice acting for the county or place where any part of such lands or streams is situated (ibid., s. 3). Other words and expressions are also defined, such as "lands," which includes messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments, and heritages of any tenure; "street" includes any square, court, alley, highway, lane, road, thoroughfare, or public passage within the limits of the special Act; as to such limits, see pp. 276, 277, post. As to whether dock quays are "streets," see Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Bristol Corporation (1889), 5 T. L. R. 203, 551, C. A.

only, it is enough to describe the clauses with respect to any matter in the words introductory to the enactment with respect to such matter, and to enact that the clauses so described, or, that the Act with the exception of the clauses so described, shall be incorporated in the special Act. All the clauses of this Act so incorporated, save so far as they are expressly varied or excepted by the special Act, thereupon form part of such Act, and such Act is construed as if such clauses were set forth therein with reference to the matter to which such Act relates (n).

Waterworks
Clauses Act,
1863.

515. The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (o), applies to any waterworks to which any special Act, passed after the 28th July, 1863 (p), and incorporating this Act, relates (q). Terms used in ~~the~~ s Act have the same meanings as the same terms (r) have when used in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (s). The Act consists of four groups of clauses relating, respectively, to security of reservoirs (t), supply of water (u), protection of water (a), and recovery of rates (b). The provisions respecting the recovery of penalties contained in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c), are incorporated in this Act (d).

Companies and corporations are authorised in some special Acts to supply water in bulk beyond these limits for any purpose, under agreements with local authorities, companies, or persons (g). SUB-SECT. 4.—Cesser of Powers.

517. Special Acts sometimes contain a provision limiting the term within which the statutory powers for the construction of the works may be exercised (j), or they may provide that if within a certain time the undertakers are not furnishing or prepared to furnish on demand a sufficient supply of water, local authorities within the limits of supply may do so in accordance with the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875 (k), or any company, body, or person may apply for an Act of Parliament or provisional order for the purpose of supplying water in any part of the district not properly supplied (l).

are to be

(e) See p. 300, post. In some Bills the compulsory supply is confined to a certain part of the area within the limits of supply, and outside water is supplied by agreement; see Pitts v. Plymouth Corporation, [1912] 3 K. B. 301.

(f) See p. 256, ante.

(g) Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 23. The clause also provides that such supply must not be given except with the consent of any company or person supplying water under parliamentary authority within the area to be supplied, and of the local authority of the district comprising that area, nor if and so long as such supply would interfere with the supply of water for domestic purposes within the limits of the Act. As to local authorities obtaining or giving such supply, see also p. 261, ante.

SECT. 1. Powers Conferred.

Special
powers.

SECT. 1.—Powers Conferred.

518. The special Act authorising a water undertaking usually empowers the undertakers (m) to make and maintain the various works in the lines and situation and upon the lands delineated in the deposited plans and described in the deposited book of reference (n). These specified works are usually certain tanks, reservoirs, wells, or pumping stations, and certain conduits or lines of pipes; in addition the undertakers are given power to make and maintain other works necessary or subsidiary thereto, such as channels, culverts, shafts, wells, filter beds, embankments, engines, machines, and appliances (o). There is usually a special provision that these powers do not exonerate the undertakers from any action, indictment, or other proceedings for nuisance in the event of any nuisance being caused or permitted by them (p). The undertakers are commonly empowered to enter upon, take, and use such of the lands described in the deposited plans and books of reference as may be required for these purposes (q), and further to collect, impound, take, use, divert, and appropriate certain definite streams and waters, and such other springs, streams, and waters as may be intercepted by the authorised works (r). In constructing the works the undertakers are allowed to deviate from the position shown in the plans, but only within clearly defined limits (s).

Time limit.

A time limit is usually fixed within which the compulsory powers authority, company or person, as to the sufficiency of the supply of water in any part of the district, such difference is to be settled by an arbitrator to be appointed on the application of either party by the Local Government Board if the undertakers are a local authority, and by the Board of Trade where they are a company; compare Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 52; see pp. 256, 257, ante.

(m) For the meaning of "undertakers," see note (l), p. 275, ante.

(n) As to the deposit of plans and books of reference, see p. 270, ante; title PARLIAMENT, Vol. XXI., pp. 732, 733; as to the correction of errors and omissions in plans, and deposit of plans as altered by Parliament or otherwise, see p. 283, post.

(q) For these purposes the Lands Clauses Acts (see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 12) are incorporated in the special Act, and compliance with their provisions is necessary before entering upon any land. As to the power to take land generally, see ibid., pp. 1 et seq.; as to land required for the purposes of the undertaking, see ibid., pp. 23 et seq.; as to conditions as to entry, see ibid., pp. 97 et seq. Power is also given to the undertakers to acquire additional land by agreement; see p. 290, post.

must be exercised (t), and another limit within which the specified works must be completed.

SECT. 1.
Powers Conferred

General
powers.

519. Further powers of a general nature in regard to construction and maintenance are conferred upon the undertakers by the incorporated provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (u). Subject to the provisions of that Act and the special Act, the undertakers may execute any of the following works for constructing the waterworks (v):—They may enter upon any lands and other places described in the said plans and books of reference (b), take levels of the same, set out such parts thereof as they think necessary (c), dig and break up the soil of such lands, and trench and sough the same, and remove or use all earth, stones, mines, minerals (d), trees, or other things dug or gotten thereout. They may from time to time (e) sink such wells or shafts, and make and maintain, alter or discontinue, such reservoirs, waterworks, cisterns, tanks, aqueducts, drains, sluices, pipes (f), culverts, engines, and other works, and erect such buildings upon the lands and streams authorised to be taken by them, as they think proper for supplying the inhabitants of the town or district within the proscribed limits with water. They may not, however, do these acts on lands which they are only authorised to use for a particular purpose (g), and in erecting buildings they must conform to the

(t) See title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 63.

(u) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, s. 12. This provision relates only to the specific works on the specific sites authorised by the special Act (A.-G. v. Frimley and Farnborough District Water Co., [1908] 1 Ch. 727, C. A., per FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., at p. 739; A.-G. v. Barnet District Gas and Water Co. (1910), 102 L. T. 546, H. L.). As to the application of this provision to works on additional lands, see p. 290, post.

(v) For the definition of "waterworks," see note (l), p. 275, ante.

(b) As to such plans and books of reference, see p. 270, ante; as to the taking of lands, see p. 281, post.

(c) Any person who wilfully obstructs any person acting under the authority of the undertakers in setting out the line of the works, or pulls up or removes any poles or stakes driven into the ground for the purpose of setting out the line of such works, or defaces or destroys any works made for the same purpose, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for each offence (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 13).

(d) As to mines and minerals, see pp. 286 et seq., post.

(e) As to the meaning of "from time to time," compare Emsley v. North Eastern Rail. Co., [1896] 1 Ch. 418, C. A. (decision on a corresponding provision in the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 16).

(f) As to laying pipes generally, see pp. 290, 291, post.

(g) Thus, they may not sink wells and erect permanent machinery on land authorised to be used only for a temporary purpose (Simpson v. South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. (1865), 11 Jur. (N. S.) 453), nor can they execute different works from those specifically authorised; a private individual whose interests are not injured is not, however, entitled to an injunction to restrain them, and proceedings should be taken in the name of the Attorney-General (Liverpool Corporation v. Chorley Waterworks Co. (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 852, C. A.). It is otherwise if private rights are injured by unauthorised acts of undertakers (Cardiff Corporation v. Cardiff Waterworks Co. (1859), 5 Jur. (N. S.) 953; Marriott v. East Grinstead Gas and Water Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 70 (both cases relating to wrongful laying of pipes)).

provisions of the Public Health Acts (h) and to the bye-laws made thereunder (i). They may also from time to time divert and impound the water from the streams mentioned for that purpose in the special Act or the said plans or books of reference, and alter the course of any such streams not being navigable, and also take such waters as may be found in or under or on the lands to be taken for constructing the works (j).

In the exercise of these general powers the undertakers must do as little damage as can be (k), and in all cases, where it can be done, they must provide other watering places, drains, and channels for the use of adjoining lands, in place of those taken away or interrupted by them (l), and they must make full compensation to all parties for all damage sustained by them through the exercise of such powers (m).

(h) As to the Public Health Acts, see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 361, note (a).

(i) Nothing in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), or the special Act exempts the undertakers from any Act for improving the sanitary condition of towns and populous districts passed in the same session of Parliament in which the special Act is passed (ibid., s. 93), or in a subsequent session. Undertakers must therefore conform to the provisions of the Public Health (Buildings in Streets) Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 52) (Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Hampton Urban Council, [1898] 2 Ch. 331), and to the bye-laws under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 157 (Uckfield Rural Council v. Crowborough District Water Co., [1899] 2 Q. B. 664).

(j) As to taking streams generally, see p. 281, post; as to sinking wells and abstracting water from lands acquired for additional purposes, see p. 290, post. Persons who illegally divert the waters supplying streams which have been taken, or do any unlawful act diminishing the supply, and do not forthwith make good the injury when so required by the undertakers, are liable to forfeit to the undertakers a sum to be fixed by two justices, not exceeding £5 for any day during which the supply is interfered with, such sum to be in addition to the sum they may be adjudged to pay for any damage sustained in consequence by the undertakers; the sum so forfeited does not bar or affect the right of the undertakers to bring an action (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 14). Owners and occupiers of lands through or by which such streams flow are, however, entitled to use the water as they might have done before the passing of the special Act, unless they have received compensation (ibid., s. 15; see Bradford Corporation v. Pickles, [1895] A. C. 587; Brymbo Water Co. v. Lesters Lime Co. (1894), 8 R. 329).

(k) The undertakers in carrying out these works are entitled to do such things as are reasonably necessary, and they will not be restrained if in executing any work in a reasonable manner they cause a nuisance (Harrison v. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co., [1891] 2 Ch. 409; see title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., p. 519). They must, however, in maintaining their works exercise their common law and statutory powers in a reasonable manner, so as to prevent damage or nuisance (Geddis v. Bann Reservoir (Proprietors) (1878), 3 App. Cas. 430; see title NEGLIGENCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 464 et seq.).

(l) As to compensation water generally, see pp. 284, 285, post; as to accommodation works, see p. 289, post. As to the construction of a covenant to supply water to a farm part of which has been purchased for waterworks, see Hadham Rural District Council v. Crallan, [1914] 2 Ch. 138.

(m) As to compensation for lands and streams taken or injuriously affected, see p. 281, post. If the undertakers wrongfully divert the water they are liable to be restrained by injunction (A.-G. of the Prince of Wales v. Bristol Waterworks Co. (1855), 10 Exch. 884).

SECT. 2.—*Lands and Streams.*SUB-SECT. 1.—Application of Lands Clauses Acts.

SECT. 2.

Lands and Streams.

Compensation
in case of compulsory powers.

520. When the undertakers are authorised by the special Act to take and use any lands or streams otherwise than with the consent of the owners and occupiers thereof, they are, in exercising these powers, made subject to the provisions and restrictions contained in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (n), and in the Lands Clauses Acts (o), except in so far as these are expressly varied (p). They must make full compensation to the owners and occupiers of, and all other parties interested in, any lands or streams taken or used for the purposes of the special Act, or injuriously affected by the construction or maintenance of the works thereby authorised, or otherwise by the execution of the powers thereby conferred, for the value of the lands and streams so taken or used, and for all damage sustained by such owners, occupiers, and other persons by reason of the exercise, as to such lands and streams, of the powers vested in the undertakers by the special Act and any Act incorporated therewith (q). The construction of accommodation works may also be required (r).

(n) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17; including those of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), so far as applicable. As to incorporation of the Acts, see p. 274, ante.

(o) As to the Lands Clauses Acts, see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 12 et seq.

(p) This is so provided in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 6, which is invariably incorporated in Acts authorising water undertakings. The Lands Clauses Acts are also commonly incorporated in express terms, but in view of this provision and of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 1, such express incorporation would appear not to be necessary. A variation sometimes made in the special Act enables the undertakers to sell superfluous land while retaining the water rights and other easements connected therewith, and also subject to reservations and conditions for the protection of the water supply; see Lisburn Urban District Council Act, 1909 (9 Edw. 7, c. lviii.), s. 46.

(q) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 6. The Acts incorporated with the special Act include the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), which contains (ibid., s. 12) express powers of executing works, and also provides that the undertakers must make full compensation to all parties interested for all damage sustained by them through the exercise of such powers; see p. 280, ante. A like provision in regard to laying pipes is contained in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 28; see p. 292, post. As to the remedy of a riparian proprietor being under the general law and not under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), see Clowes v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. (1872), 8 Ch. App. 125. The compensation payable is not limited to damage caused by construction of the works, but extends to cases where the damage arises from acts done for maintenance of the works or in order to obtain a supply of water, as where a house is damaged by pumping running silt (Fletcher v. Birkenhead Corporation, [1907] 1 K. B. 205, C. A., distinguishing Hammermith etc. Rail. Co. v. Brand (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 171, on the ground of the different construction of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), from that of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 16); compare Jordeson v. Sutton, Southcoates, and Drypool Gas Co., [1899] 2 Ch. 217, C. A.; and see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF

SECT. 2.
Lands and Streams.
 Determination of compensation.

521. The compensation provided in recent special Acts in respect of intercepted water very frequently takes the form of "compensation water" (s); but, unless otherwise provided in the special Act (t) or Acts incorporated therewith, the compensation as regards both lands and streams is determined in the manner provided by the Lands Clauses Acts (u) for determining questions of compensation with regard to lands. All the provisions of these Acts are applicable to determine the amount of any such compensation, and to enforce payment or other satisfaction therefor (w). It follows that where undertakers are authorised to take the whole of a stream, and not merely so much as they may think expedient from time to time, they must give notice of their intention to take the whole and pay compensation for the whole, and the proceedings to be adopted are those provided for a purchase of land (a), but where they divert part only of a stream, the rights of riparian owners are merely injuriously affected, and the procedure in regard to compensation corresponds with that in respect of lands injuriously affected (b). The principles of compensation generally applicable to lands taken or injuriously affected for statutory undertakings apply to lands and streams taken for waterworks (c).

LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 48; Rolhes (Countess) v. Kirkcaldy Waterworks Commissioners (1882), 7 App. Cas. 694, commented on in Re Manchester and Milford Rail. Co., [1897] 1 Ch. 276; as to damage to mill-owners, see Tatton v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. (1879), 44 J. P. 106.

(t) For examples of such a provision in special Acts, see Rolhes (Countess) v. Kirkcaldy Waterworks Commissioners, supra; Evan-Thomas v. Neath Corporation (1912), 76 J. P. 397. Provision has also been inserted in special Acts requiring the undertakers to purchase mills and other works on a stream, if it can be shown that the business thereof cannot be satisfactorily carried on by reason of the powers contained in the Act; see Rochdale Corporation Water Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. cccxxvi.), s. 38 (2) (b).

It is immaterial that the undertakers allow part of the stream to continue to flow (Stone v. Yeovil Corporation, supra). Streams once acquired may be subsequently diverted without compensation (Girdwood v. Belfast Water Commissioners (1877), 1 L. R. Ir. 28).

Trowbridge Waterworks Co.*, supra, per JAMES, L.J., at p. 462). If part of the water is returned after use, this must be taken into consideration in assessing the compensation (Page v. Kettering Waterworks (1892), 8 T. L. R. 228). As to compensation for diversion of water, see also Little v. Dublin and Drogheda Rail. Co. (1857), 7 I. C. L. R. 82; *Mortimer v. South Wales Rail. SUB-SECT. 2.—Correction and Deposit of Plans.

SECT. 2.
Lands and Streams,
Procedure for correction.

522. If any omission, misstatement, or wrong description has been made of any lands or streams, or of the owners, lessees, or occupiers of any lands or streams described in the plans or books of reference deposited in compliance with the Standing Orders of either House of Parliament (d), or in the schedule to the special Act, the undertakers, after giving ten days' notice to the owners, lessees, and occupiers of the lands and streams affected by such proposed correction, may apply to two justices for the correction. If it appear to them that the omission, misstatement, or wrong description arose from mistake, they must certify the same accordingly. Such certificate, with the other documents to which it relates, must be deposited with the clerk to the county council of the several counties in which the lands or streams affected thereby are situated, and thereupon such plan, book of reference, or schedule is deemed to be corrected according to the certificate, and the undertakers may make the works in accordance therewith (e).

523. The undertakers must not begin to execute the waterworks unless they have previously deposited with the clerk of the county council of any county (f) in which the works are situated a plan and section of all such alterations from the original plan and section, if any, as have been approved of by Parliament, and also with the parish clerk, or in rural parishes with the clerk to the parish council when there is a council (g), of the several parishes in which such alterations have been authorised to be made, copies or extracts of or from such plans and sections as relate to such parishes respectively (h).

The clerks of the various authorities concerned must (i) receive these plans and sections of alterations and the copies and extracts thereof respectively, and keep the same as well as the original plans and sections, and allow all persons interested to inspect any of them and to make copies and extracts of or from them, in the like of a stream, see Stone v. Yeovil Corporation (1876), 2 C. P. D. 99, C. A., per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 108. As to laying pipes and acquiring easements, see pp. 290, 291, post.

(d) See p. 270, ante.

(e) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 7. The certificate and documents must be kept by the clerk of the county council (ibid.). A similar provision exists as regards railways; see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., p. 649.

(f) A "county" includes a county of a city or county of a town (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 3); see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 300, 340. As to the substitution of clerks of the county council for clerks of the peace, see Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 83 (6); and title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 343.

SECT. 2. manner, and upon the like terms, and under the like penalty for Lands and default, as is provided in the case of the original plans and sections Streams. by the Parliamentary Documents Deposit Act, 1837 (k).

Certified 524. Copies of the plans and books of reference or of any copies. alteration or correction thereof or extracts therefrom certified by the clerk to the county council, which certificate the clerk must give to all parties interested when required, must be received in all courts of justice or elsewhere as evidence of the contents thereof (l).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Deviation.

Limits of 525. The undertakers in constructing the waterworks must deviation. not deviate (m) from the line of works laid down in the deposited plans (n) as authorised by Parliament more than the prescribed number of yards, and where no number of yards is prescribed not more than 10 yards, nor in any case to any greater extent than the line of lateral deviation described in the said plans with respect to such works. The undertakers cannot take or use for the purpose of such deviation (m) the lands of any person not mentioned in the book of reference (n) without his previous consent in writing, unless the name of such person has been omitted by mistake, and the fact that such omission happened from mistake has been duly certified (o).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Compensation Water.

Provision of 526. In the place of the water intercepted or abstracted by compensation the construction and maintenance of waterworks, provision is now water. commonly made in special Acts whereby riparian owners and occupiers become entitled to what is termed "compensation water," and so long as there is no default on the part of the undertakers in regard to this water, these owners and occupiers may be entitled to no other compensation in respect of their water rights (p). By "compensation water" is meant a regular and definite flow of water throughout the year which the undertakers must send down the bed of the stream. This amount is usually stated in the special Act in gallons per day, hour

As to the limits of deviation, and as to taking lands for the purpose of deviation generally, see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 21, 23. The right to deviate is a right to move the situation of the works, and does not authorise a deviation from the size or nature of the works, as by making a reservoir of less size than that authorised (Herron v. Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners, [1892] A. C. 498).

or minute, but is calculated as being one-third, or sometimes one-fourth, of the mean available rainfall during three consecutive dry years (g). The water may be required to be discharged into the stream continuously during every twenty-four hours (r), or during certain specified hours of each working day (s). For the purpose of this flow the undertakers are empowered to construct a special or compensation reservoir, and until this is completed (t) they are authorised to take water from the stream only when the flow exceeds a definite amount measured by gauge (u).

For neglect or default in connexion with the discharge of compensation water the undertakers are liable for penalties for each day's default (a). These penalties are recoverable by the persons affected (b), and the undertakers may also be required to make compensation for loss or injury sustained by such persons (c). In the absence of negligence, the undertakers are not liable for damage due to the water sent down being polluted from accidental causes (d). Penalties.

527. Apart from the special Act, undertakers must provide Watering places etc.

(g) In order to arrive at the available rainfall, 14 or 15 inches is usually deducted from the average rainfall over the catchment area during three consecutive dry years. This deduction is to allow for evaporation and absorption. It will vary with the nature of the country. If the statistics for three consecutive dry years are not available for purposes of calculation, the average annual rainfall is utilised, and four-sixths or four-fifths of this is taken as representing the mean rainfall of three consecutive dry years.

(t) As to the duty of undertakers to complete, see Davies-Cooke v. Hawarden and District Waterworks Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 223; as to the remedy of mill-owners for non-completion, see Waller v. Manchester Corporation (1861), 6 H. & N. 667.

(u) See Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 5 (1).

(a) If these penalties are recoverable before a court of summary jurisdiction and are punitive in their nature, that court has power to reduce the amount (Davies-Cooke v. Hawarden and District Waterworks Co., supra). Under some special Acts they are compensatory and not punitive, and in the absence of express provision are recoverable in the High Court and not before justices (Meltham Spinning Co., Ltd. v. Huddersfield Corporation (1903), 67 J. P. 445, C. A.; Beaumont v. Huddersfield Corporation (1902), 67 J. P. 57, C. A.).

(b) Questions have arisen as to whether each person affected can recover the full penalty (Beaumont v. Huddersfield Corporation, supra; compare Huddersfield Corporation Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. cxxxvii.), s. 57), or whether it can only be recovered by one of the persons affected (Lewis v. Swansea Corporation (1888), 4 T. L. R. 706, C. A.). The matter depends on the wording of the special Act.

(c) Compare Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 5 (3). Non-user of the water by the works for which the water was intended will not release the undertakers, but the owners may be entitled only for damage actually suffered (Hanbury v. Llanfrechfa Upper Urban District Council, supra).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Mines and Minerals.

Rules applicable to mines and minerals :

528. The relations of the undertakers with the owners, lessees and occupiers of mines and minerals (f) lying under or near the waterworks and works connected with them are governed by a statutory code which forms part of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (g). This code, with some modifications, applies also to works for water supply constructed by local authorities (h). It corresponds to, and in some respects is identical with, that applicable to other undertakings, such as railways (i). Its provisions may be summarised as follows:—

(1) purchase of minerals ;

(1) Mines and minerals do not pass to the undertakers on the purchase of land, except such as may be duly dug or carried away or used in the construction of the waterworks, unless expressly purchased (j).

(2) map of underground works ;

(2) The undertakers must from time to time, within six months from the laying or making of any pipes, conduits, or underground works, cause a map of the district to be made showing the same and all their underground works within the district, and cause it to be from time to time corrected, and they must keep the map at their office, and it must be open to the inspection of all persons interested (k).

(3) deposit of map ;

(3) Within three months from the making or correction of such map the undertakers must deposit with the clerk of the county council and with the clerks of the parish councils or parish clerks of the county and parishes respectively in which the works are situated, copies of such particulars, corrections and additions so far as relate to such counties and parishes respectively (l). The clerks must keep

(4) Unless otherwise provided for by agreement (n), if the owner, lessee or occupier of mines or minerals lying under the reservoirs or buildings of the undertakers, or under any of their pipes or works which are underground, and are described in the map to be left and deposited as above mentioned (o), or within the prescribed distance, or, if no distance is prescribed, within forty yards therefrom (p), be desirous of working the same, such owner, lessee and occupier must give the undertakers notice, but under certain conditions the owner, occupier or lessee is restrained from working the mines or minerals (q).

(4) notice to work minerals;

(5) If before the expiration of the thirty days the undertakers do not give the required notice stating their willingness to pay compensation, the owner, lessee or occupier may work the mines, and drain the same by means of engines or otherwise, so that no wilful damage is done to the waterworks and the mines are not worked in an unusual manner (r).

(5) when right to work minerals arises;

(6) If the working of the mines under the waterworks or within the prescribed distance is prevented by reason of apprehended injury to such works, the owners, lessees and occupiers of such mines may cut and make such airways, headways, gateways or water levels through the mines, measures, or strata the working whereof shall be so prevented, as may be requisite to enable them to ventilate, drain, and work any mines or minerals on each side thereof (s).

(6) restrictions on working;

The provisions of the Parliamentary Documents Deposit Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 83), apply to such custody and to the taking of copies etc. (Waterworks (Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 21); see, further, titles COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 18; LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 253, 254.

(n) If the land is purchased by agreement on a voluntary sale, the common law rights of support apply (New Moss Colliery, Ltd. v. Manchester Corporation, [1908] A. C. 117).

(o) If the map is not so made, kept and deposited, the owners, lessees and occupiers are not bound to give notice, and are not liable for injury caused by their workings (South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. Mason & Sons (1886), 56 L. J. (Q. R.) 255).

(s) Waterworks (Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 24; such works must not exceed the prescribed dimensions or sections, and if none are prescribed, 8 feet wide and 8 feet high, nor may they be cut or made

SECT. 2.

(7) compensation payable;

(7) Unless otherwise provided by agreement, the undertakers must from time to time pay to the owner, lessee or occupier of mines lying on both sides of the waterworks, and other works connected therewith, all such additional expenses and losses incurred by him by reason of the severance of the lands over such mines, by such works or of the continuous working being interrupted as aforesaid, or by reason of the same being worked under the restrictions contained in the special and incorporated Acts, and for any mines and minerals not purchased by the undertakers which cannot be obtained by reason of making and maintaining the said works of the undertakers, or by reason of such apprehended injury (t) from the working thereof (u).

(8) right of inspection;

(8) In order to ascertain whether the mines are being worked so as to damage the waterworks, the undertakers, after giving twenty-four hours' notice in writing, may enter and inspect the mines and works, and use any apparatus or machinery of the owner, lessee or occupier, and use all necessary means for discovering the distance from the said works to the parts of such mines which are being worked or about to be worked (a).

(9) liability of undertakers.

(9) Compensation in the form of damages may be claimed from water undertakers by owners, lessees and occupiers of mines, notwithstanding that the works were constructed and maintained under an Act of Parliament (b).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Underground Water.

Position at common law.

529. The common law confers no rights in respect of underground water running in undefined or unknown channels (c), except that an owner of land may sink wells in his own land and so obtain a supply, but another owner may by doing the same draw off the water from his neighbours. In the absence of special provision water undertakers can exercise this power in regard to their

upon any part of the waterworks so as to injure them (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 24); see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 52, 53.

(t) This means injury anticipated by the undertakers in consequence of which they have stopped the works, and not injury anticipated by the owner, lessee or occupier, who cannot recover for such anticipated injury until it arises (Holliday v. Wakefield Corporation, [1891] A. C. 81).

(u) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 25. Disputes as to the amount of compensation payable are to be settled by arbitration under the Lands Clauses Acts (ibid.). This provision is similar to the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 81, but contains certain variations; see also title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 53.

Metropolitan Water Board*, [1907] 1 K. B. 588 (well below surface of stream, but stream affected). As to water flowing in definite but unknown channels, see Bradford Corporation v. Ferrand, [1902] 2 Ch. 655; Black v. Ballymena Township Commissioners (1886), 17 L. R. Ir. 459; and, generally, title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, p. 430, post.

own land, and are not liable to pay compensation for any loss they thereby inflict on their neighbours (d); in the same way an owner of land can drain off the water in his land, and so prevent it reaching the springs from which the undertakers draw their supply (e).

SECT. 2.
Lands and Streams.

530. In consequence of the loss suffered by neighbouring owners from the pumping operations of water undertakers, such owners are allowed to be heard before committees of Parliament on these Bills (f), and clauses are now inserted for the protection of wells (g). Such a clause may limit the powers of the undertakers to taking water only from such of their lands as are specifically mentioned in the special Act (h), or may give the owner of any well within a certain radius which is affected compensation either in water or money (i). Such a clause may give the owner whose wells injured the right to require the undertakers to lay at their own expense the pipes necessary to give a supply to his house, and to charge him for the water at a reduced rate (k). Clauses have also been inserted in order to protect water undertakers from having the water in their area pumped from wells and conveyed for sale or use beyond their area of supply (l).

Statutory
provisions.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Accommodation Works.

531. The special Act may require the undertakers to erect works for making good the interruption of access caused to any lands adjoining or near the waterworks, or otherwise for the accommodation of such lands (m). If any difference arises respecting the construction of any such accommodation works, or the kind or size or sufficiency thereof, or respecting the maintenance thereof, it must be determined by two justices, who must also appoint the time within which such accommodation works shall be begun and finished by the undertakers (n).

Effect of default.

If the undertakers fail to begin such works for fourteen days next after the time appointed by the justices for their beginning, or, having begun such works, fail diligently to execute the same in a sufficient manner, the person aggrieved by such failure may execute such works or repairs, and the reasonable expenses thereof must, on demand, be repaid by the undertakers to the person by whom the same shall have been so executed. Disputes as to the nature or amount of such expenses are required to be settled by two justices (o).

SUB-SECT. 8.—Additional Lands.

Acquisition
by agreement.

532. The special Act usually authorises the undertakers to acquire a certain amount of land in addition to that specified in the Act (p); they are empowered to acquire this land by agreement, and the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts applicable to purchase by agreement extend thereto (q). In recent special Acts it has been provided that the undertakers must not cause or permit any nuisance on such lands (r). Undertakers are not generally authorised to sink wells and erect pumping stations upon such additional lands, and in the absence of clear provision to the contrary (s) the execution and making of such works may be restrained by injunction (t).

SECT. 3.—Laying of Pipes.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In Private Lands.

Extent of power.

533. The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (u), and other incorporated Acts do not authorise the undertakers to enter upon and lay pipes or construct underground works in any land not dedicated to public use unless by agreement with the owner and occupier (w), or unless they acquire the land (a). Some special Acts authorise the like provisions in regard to railways, see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 666 et seq.

(o) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 17.

(p) The amount of such land is usually specifically stated in the special Act, and is sometimes described as land for extraordinary purposes.

(r) See Frimley and Farnborough District Water Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. clxxxv.), s. 30.

(s) The special Act may authorise such works on the additional land, as by making the powers of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 12, applicable thereto (A.-G. v. Barnet District Gas and Water Co. (1910), 74 J. P. 193, H. L.); as to such powers, see p. 279, ante.

(u) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17.

(w) Ibid., s. 29. The undertakers may, however, at any time enter upon, and lay or place any new pipe in the place of an existing pipe in any land wherein any pipe has been already lawfully laid down under statutory powers, and they may repair and alter any pipe so laid down (ibid.). The undertakers may substitute other pipes without removing the old pipes if the owner suffers no damage thereby (Bridges v. Fraserburgh Commissioners of Police (1887), 25 Sc. L. R. 151).

(a) Under the Lands Clauses Acts, in the absence of special provision, a limited owners to grant easements and rights in land to the undertakers, and more recently special Acts have authorised the undertakers to acquire compulsorily easements only in land for the purpose of underground works, and have made the provisions of the Lands Clauses Acts (b) applicable to such compulsory purchase. This power has, however, been granted subject to the proviso that the owner, in his particulars of claim, may require the undertakers to acquire the lands in respect of which a notice to treat has been given for an easement only (c).

SECT. 3.
Laying of Pipes.

SUB-SECT. 2.—In Streets.

534. Subject to certain supervision (d), powers are conferred on undertakers by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (e), to open and break up the soil and pavement of the streets (f) and bridges (g) dedicated to public use (h), within the limits of the special Act (i), and to open and break up any sewers, drains, or tunnels (k) within or under such streets and bridges, and to lay stratum only of land cannot be purchased; see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., p. 22. Under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), local authorities may in certain cases lay pipes through private land upon making compensation subsequently; see pp. 259, 260, ante. In special Acts authorising local authorities to construct waterworks, a clause extending this power to such works has been inserted; see Burnley Corporation Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. lxxxix.), s. 12.

(b) As to the Lands Clauses Acts, see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 12 et seq.

(c) See the Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 9.

(d) See pp. 292, 293, post.

(e) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, ss. 28—34. These powers also apply to local authorities where they have not the control of the streets; see p. 259, ante.

(f) The word "street" is defined as including any square, court, or alley, highway, lane, road, thoroughfare, or public passage or place within the limits of the special Act (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 3). As to the rights of undertakers to break up streets, see also titles ELECTRIC LIGHTING AND POWER, Vol. XII., pp. 573 et seq.; GAS, Vol. XV., pp. 325 et seq.; SEWERS AND DRAINS, Vol. XXV., pp. 731 et seq.; TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES, Vol. XXVII., pp. 360 et seq.; TRAMWAYS AND LIGHT RAILWAYS, Vol. XXVII., pp. 788 et seq.; as to interference by undertakers with the works of water undertakings, see p. 294, post.

(g) As to bridges, compare title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 326. The clauses as to laying gas pipes are in many respects similar to those relating to water pipes.

(h) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 28, 29. Although the subsoil is not dedicated to public use, pipes can nevertheless be laid in it under this provision (Schweder v. Worthing Gas Light and Coke Co. (No. 2), [1913] 1 Ch. 118). Persons laying pipes in private streets may be restrained by injunction (Goodson v. Richardson (1874), 9 Ch. App. 221; compare title GAS, Vol. XV., pp. 307, 327; see also Andrews v. Abertillery Urban Council, [1911] 2 Ch. 398, C. A.).

(k) The word "tunnels" does not include railway tunnels, but only those of the same class as sewers and drains (Caledonian Rail. Co. v. Glasgow Corporation (1901), 3 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 526, followed in Schweder v. Worthing Gas Light and Coke Co., [1912] 1 Ch. 83 (tunnel connecting two sides of a road); see also Thompson v. Sunderland Gas Co. (1877), 2 down and place within the same limits pipes, conduits, service pipes, and other works and engines, and from time to time to alter and remove the same (l). For these purposes the undertakers may remove and use all earth and materials in and under such streets and bridges, and do all other acts which they from time to time deem necessary for supplying water to the inhabitants of the district included within the said limits (m). They can, however, only exercise these powers for the purposes of their authorised works (n), and cannot lay down pipes within their limits of supply for the purpose of carrying water for an unauthorised supply beyond these limits (o).

streets.

535. In recent special Acts the general powers of laying pipes in public streets are extended to streets laid out but not dedicated to public use, for the purpose of supplying water to the premises of any owner or occupier of premises abutting on or being erected in any such street who makes application, and the general provisions are made applicable to such street (p).

Compensation
for damage.

536. In the execution of these powers, whether in the special Act or in the incorporated Acts, the undertakers must do as little damage as possible, and make compensation for any damage done (q).

Notice to road authority.

537. Before the undertakers open or break up any street, bridge, sewer, drain, or tunnel they must give to the persons under whose control or management the same are (r), or to their Swansea Borough Council*, [1913] A. C. 597). Compensation may be recoverable in respect of interference with the access to premises, whereby a person's trade is injured: compare Linght v. Christchurch Corporation, [1912] 3 K. B. 595, C. A.

SECT. 3.
Laying of Pipes.

Except in cases of such emergency, no such street, bridge, sewer or tunnel may be opened or broken up, except under the superintendence of the persons having the control or management thereof or of their officer, and according to such plan as shall be approved of by such persons or their officer. The plan must show how the underground work is to be executed, and the position and depth at which the pipes are intended to be laid (t). If the persons, having such control and management do not approve, they may make a counter proposal by plan or otherwise, and in case of difference the works must be carried out according to such plan as shall be determined by two justices. If, however, the persons having such control or management and their officer fail to attend at the time fixed for the opening of any such street, bridge, sewer, drain, or tunnel, after having had notice as aforesaid, or if they do not propose any plan for breaking up or opening the same, or refuse or neglect to superintend the operation, the undertakers may carry out the work specified in such notice without the superintendence of such persons or their officers (a).

authority.

538. When the undertakers open or break up the road or pavement of any street or bridge or any sewer, drain, or tunnel, they must with all convenient speed complete the work for which the same shall be broken up and fill in the ground and reinstate and make good the road or pavement, or the sewer, drain, or tunnel, so opened or broken up (b), and carry away the rubbish occasioned thereby (c).

Lambeth Waterworks Co.*, supra, per LINDLEY, L.J., at pp. 304, 305. Two justices may, on the application of the persons having the control or management of any such sewer or drain or their officer, require the undertakers to make such temporary or other works as they may think necessary for guarding against any interruption of the drainage during the execution of any works which interfere with any such sewer or drain (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 31).

(b) Leaving a pipe in the structure of a tunnel is not a reinstatement (Schweder v. Worthing Gas Light and Coke Co., [1912] 1 Ch. 83). As to the liability of undertakers for injuries caused by their failure to reinstate, see pp. 311, 312, post.

(c) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 32. Undertakers breaking up streets to lay water pipes are under the same obligations as to lighting by night and subsequent repair as undertakers laying gas pipes; see ibid.: and title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 328.

SECT. 3.

Laying of Pipes.

Penalties.

539. If the undertakers open or break up any street or bridge or any sewer, drain, or tunnel without complying with the above provisions, they are liable to forfeit to the persons having the control or management of the street, bridge, sewer, drain, or tunnel in respect of which such default is made a sum not exceeding £5 for every such offence, and an additional sum of £5 for each day during which any delay in reinstating the street, bridge, sewer, drain, or tunnel, or in carrying away the rubbish, continues after they have received notice thereof (d).

If such delay or omission takes place, the persons having the control or management of the street, bridge, sewer, drain, or tunnel in question may cause the work so delayed or omitted to be executed, and the undertakers must repay the expenses of executing the same (e).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Interference by Other Undertakers.

When
interference authorised.

540. Persons who interfere with the works of the undertakers are in general guilty of an offence (f); but such interference sometimes becomes necessary when it is desired to lay sewers, drains, gas pipes, electric mains and such like works in the streets where water pipes exist. It may be also necessary to alter their position in connexion with public improvements, or in the making of railways or construction of tramways. Special or general Acts authorising such other undertakings or improvements usually contain provisions allowing for these necessary alterations in regard to water pipes, but subject to the rights of the undertakers being properly protected and the water supply maintained (g).

Westminster Corporation* (1905), 75 L. J. (K. B.) 384, C. A.; as to damages for defective works, see Cattle v. Stockton Waterworks (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 453.

The powers in the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 18—23 (as to which see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 679 et seq.), relating to the interference with gas and water pipes, are commonly extended to pipes and mains of local authorities by the special Act of the railway company; see Model Railway Bill, 1913, clause 33. If a local authority, by lowering the level of a street, thereby brings the pipes nearer to the surface, but does not interfere with the pipes themselves, it is not required to relay them (Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. v. Wandsworth Board of Works, [1896] 2 Ch. 603, C. A.).

SECT. 4.—*Security of Reservoirs.*SECT. 4.
Security of Reservoirs.

541. Where undertakers in pursuance of their statutory powers collect large quantities of water in reservoirs they are not liable for injury caused by the escape thereof, unless there is either provision in their special Act to the contrary (h), or they are guilty of negligence in the exercise of their powers (i).

Extent of liability.

542. Certain general provisions providing for the prompt repair of reservoirs believed to be insecure are incorporated in special Acts authorising waterworks (j).

Statutory
provisions.

Any person interested may complain to two justices that any reservoir constructed by the undertakers is in a dangerous state. The justices must thereupon make inquiry forthwith into the truth of this complaint (k). If on such inquiry they are satisfied that the complaint is well founded, and that the reservoir is in a dangerous state, and that the danger is so imminent as not to admit of delay in removing the cause of complaint, they must order such person as they think fit to enter on the property of the undertakers and to lower the water in the reservoirs, and to execute and do all such works and things as the justices think requisite and proper for removing the cause of complaint (l).

Complaint of insecurity.

If, however, the justices, while being satisfied that there is good cause of complaint, are not satisfied that the reservoir is in These clauses vary in form, but generally require the undertakers to make full compensation to all persons for all damage or loss sustained in consequence of the bursting or giving way of the reservoir authorised by the special Act. This liability is sometimes extended to aqueducts, embankments, and other works; see Dunn v. Birmingham Canal Co. (1872), L. R. 8 Q. B. 42. The same principle applies to damage caused by the bursting of water mains (Green v. Chelsea Waterworks Co. (1894), 70 L. T. 547, C. A.; Snook v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. (1886), 2 T. L. They apply to England and Ireland, and with the necessary sanction to Scotland (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 11).

Powers of

(k) Ibid., s. 3. Two justices may, on their own view, and without complaint by any person, proceed under these provisions as if a complaint had been made to them (ibid.).

(l) Ibid., s. 4. The order must be in writing under the hands of the justices, and may be in the statutory form with such variations as circumstances require (ibid., s. 6, Schedule).

SECT. 4. such an imminently dangerous state as not to admit of delay in removing such cause, they must issue their summons to the undertakers to answer the complaint. Upon hearing the parties the justices may, or upon default of appearance of the undertakers must, order the undertakers, within such time as the justices think reasonable and specify in the order, to lower the water in the reservoir and to execute and do all such works and things as the justices think requisite and proper for removing the cause of complaint (m).

Failure to
defects.

543. If the undertakers fail to execute or do within the prescribed period any such work or thing, the justices who made the order, or any other two justices, on being satisfied of such failure, may either order such persons as they think fit to enter on the property of the undertakers and to lower the water in the reservoir, and to execute and do all such works and things as the justices think requisite and proper for removing the cause of complaint, or may, if they think fit, by order impose on the undertakers a penalty not exceeding £10 for every day during which such failure continues after the making of the order imposing the penalty (n).

Persons acting in pursuance of any such order are not to be deemed trespassers, and any person who wilfully obstructs any person so acting, or wilfully does or instigates or suffers to be done anything in contravention of the order, is liable for each offence to a penalty not exceeding £50 (o).

Costs and expenses.

544. The justices may order all or such part as they think fit of the cost of and incident to the applying for and obtaining of any such order to be paid by the undertakers, and also all or such part as the justices think fit of the expenses of the works and things executed in pursuance of any such order by any person other than the undertakers, to be paid by the undertakers to such person as the justices appoint. If, on the other hand, the justices think there is no sufficient ground of complaint, they may order the complainant to pay the whole or part of the costs (p).

Appeal.

545. The undertakers have a right of appeal from any of the above orders or determinations to the court of quarter sessions for the county or place where the cause of appeal arises, but the order or determination appealed against continues in force pending the appeal (q).

Protection to undertakers.

546. The undertakers are not liable to pay any damages,

The court may either affirm or quash the order or determination, or make such other order as may seem fit, and may make such order as to the costs of the original proceedings and of the appeal as it thinks fit. The procedure on appeal is that prescribed by the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), in the case of appeals in respect of penalties (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 9); see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., p. 736. SECT. 4.
Security of Reservoirs.

SECT. 5.—Protection of Water against Fouling.

547. Many general enactments exist for the purpose of preventing the pollution of rivers and streams, and their enforcement is of great importance to water undertakers (s). Local Acts have been passed with the same object (t). Express provisions have also been made to prevent the water supply from being fouled or contaminated by the carrying on of works by other statutory undertakers (a). In addition to these, certain general provisions for guarding against fouling the water of the undertakers (b) are inserted in special Acts relating to water, while these Acts themselves often contain express provisions for the same purpose (c). General provisions.

548. Every person commits an offence and is liable to a penalty under the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (d), (1) who bathes in any stream, reservoir, aqueduct, or other waterworks belonging to the undertakers, or washes, or throws, or causes to enter therein any dog or other animal; (2) who throws rubbish, dirt, filth, or other noisome thing into any stream, reservoir, aqueduct, or other waterworks belonging to the undertakers, or washes or cleanses therein any cloth, wool, leather, or skin of any animal, or any clothes or other things; (3) who causes the water of any sink, sewer or drain, steam engine, boiler, or other filthy Offences.

water belonging to him or under his control, to run or be brought into any stream, reservoir, aqueduct or other waterworks belonging to the undertakers, or does any other act whereby the water of the undertakers is fouled (e).

The same Act imposes penalties on every person making and supplying gas within the limits of the special Act who causes the water of the undertakers to be fouled, and power is given to the undertakers to dig up and examine the gas pipes (f).

549. Various powers are now conferred upon the undertakers in special Acts to prevent the water being fouled. They are authorised to make and carry into effect agreements with the owners, lessees and occupiers of any lands within the drainage area of the reservoirs and works authorised by the special Act with reference to the execution by either party of such works as may be necessary for the purpose of draining such lands or any of them, or for more effectually collecting, conveying and preserving the purity of the waters authorised by the special Act to be diverted, collected, and appropriated by the undertakers, flowing to, upon or from such lands directly or derivatively into such reservoirs and works (g).

The undertakers are also authorised in some special Acts to hold lands acquired by them under the powers of their Act which they may deem necessary for the purpose of protecting their waterworks against pollution, fouling and contamination, and so long as such necessity continues the lands are not deemed to be superfluous lands within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Acts (h). In certain cases water undertakers have been authorised to acquire a very large portion or the whole of the catchment area in order to protect the supply. The power generally authorises such land to be acquired by agreement, but part may also be authorised to be taken compulsorily (i).

(e) Waterworks (Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 61. The penalty is, for each offence, to forfeit to the undertakers a sum not exceeding £5, and in respect of the last-mentioned offence, a further sum of 20s. for each day, if more than one, that it continues (ibid.). The undertakers have also power to cut off the pipes supplying water to persons contaminating their water (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 16); see p. 322, post.

(f) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 62—67; see title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, p. 442, post. These provisions are almost identical with the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), ss. 21—28 (see title GAS, Vol. XV., pp. 360 et seq.; but while the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), ss. 21—28, apply only to gas-undertakers in whose special Act they are incorporated, the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 62—67, apply to all persons making or supplying gas whether under statutory powers or otherwise. For a form of notice by a local authority to a gas company of fouling its water supply, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 178.

(g) Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 6.

(h) Ibid., clause 7. The undertakers must not create or permit a nuisance on any such lands nor erect any buildings thereon other than offices and dwellings for persons in their employ, and such buildings and works as may be incidental to or connected with their water undertaking (ibid.). As to superfluous lands, see title COMPULSORY PURCHASE OF LAND AND COMPENSATION, Vol. VI., pp. 26 et seq.

(i) See Manchester Corporation Waterworks Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. xxxvi.), ss. 9, 20, 21, 63; Liverpool Corporation Waterworks Act, 1880 550. A clause which has also been inserted in special Acts enables undertakers to make bye-laws for preventing the pollution, fouling or contamination of the water they are authorised to take. By these bye-laws they may prescribe the construction, maintenance and use of proper drains, sewers and works, and make provision for the prevention of any act or thing tending to pollution of the water (k). Such bye-laws are subject to the approval of the council of every district comprising any part of the area within which it is proposed that they are to be in force, but if such consent is withheld unreasonably, and the Local Government Board so considers, such consent becomes unnecessary. The owners and other persons interested in the lands are entitled to compensation if their lands are injuriously affected by reason of the restrictions in these bye-laws (l).

Part IV.—Supply of Water by Undertakers.

SECT. 1.—In General.

551. Undertakers authorised by special Act to supply water are required by the general Acts to afford within the prescribed area a supply for domestic purposes (m), for various public purposes (n), and for the extinction of fires (o). They are not required to supply water for non-domestic or trade purposes, but are authorised by the special Act to do so, provided that the supply for domestic purposes is not interfered with (p). Subject to the same proviso, and to certain other restrictions, undertakers are often allowed to supply water in bulk for any purpose beyond their prescribed area of supply (q).

Purposes of supply.

SECT. 2.—Domestic Supply.

552. The undertakers must (r) provide and keep in their mains (s) a supply of pure and wholesome water sufficient for the domestic use of all the inhabitants of the town or district within the limits of the special Act (t), who are entitled, as hereinafter mentioned, to demand a supply, and are willing to pay water rate for the same (a). In the absence of express provision in the special Act, water will be deemed to be pure and wholesome even if it contains ingredients which may, on passing through lead service pipes, cause the water to become deleterious (b).

553. Every owner or occupier of any dwelling-house, or part of a dwelling-house, within the limits of the special Act is entitled, subject to certain conditions as to having laid or laying pipes (c), and paying or tendering the water rate payable in respect thereof (d) and to the provisions of the special Act, to demand and receive from the undertakers a sufficient supply of water for domestic purposes (e). The term "dwelling-house" is not limited to the dwelling-houses of private families, but may include lodging-houses (f), boarding-schools (g), and workhouses (h), provided that the supply is to be used for a domestic purpose.

A workhouse is not, however, a "private dwelling-house," if that term is used in a special Act (Bristol Guardians v. Bristol Waterworks Co., [1914]

554. No very definite meaning can be attached to the terms "domestic use" or "domestic purposes." They include the use of water for the ordinary and reasonable purposes of domestic life (i), and, in the absence of provision in the special Act to the contrary, include the use of water for fixed baths, water-closets (k), urinals, hot water, heating, and fire hydrants (l), and for the watering of gardens forming part of the amenities of a house (m), or for the washing of horses and carriages kept for private use (n). Most special Acts contain provisions declaring that a supply for certain specific purposes is not to be deemed a supply for domestic purposes. The provision may take the form of a separate clause, or the object of the undertakers may be accomplished by the incorporation of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (o), which, however, is sometimes varied by other provisions. Under that Act a supply of water for domestic

In some recent special Acts provision has been made for the water being supplied to certain public institutions by meter; see Selby Urban District Council Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. cccxxiii.), s. 19; Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 20; and pp. 317, 340, 341, post.

(k) Weaver v. Cardiff Corporation (1883), 48 L. T. 906. In many special Acts the undertakers have power to charge additional rates in respect of baths and for certain water-closets, and in such cases the supply for such purposes will be excluded from the supply for domestic purposes included in the water rate (Walker v. Lambeth Waterworks (1894), 8 R. 622; Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Bingham (1880), 25 Ch. D. 446, n.); but it may, nevertheless, be compulsory (Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Carter, Same v. Brooks (1882), 8 Q. B. D. 632). There appears to be some doubt as to whether a private swimming-bath is a domestic purpose, but if attached to a school for the purpose of teaching swimming it would fall within a provision in a special Act excluding trade purposes from domestic use (Barnard Castle Urban Council v. Wilson, supra). As to the power of water undertakers to supply public swimming-baths with water at special rates, see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., p. 496. In some recent Acts the capacity of the bath which is included in domestic purposes is defined; see Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 25; p. 340, post.

purposes does not include a supply of water for cattle or for horses, or for washing carriages where such horses or carriages are kept for sale or hire, or by a common carrier, or a supply for any trade, manufacture, or business, or for watering of gardens, or for any ornamental purpose (p). If a trade or business is carried on in a house, the residents in such house are, under that provision, entitled to water for domestic purposes therein (q). It is common now to insert in Water Acts a provision that the undertakers are not to be bound to supply with water otherwise than by measure any building used by an occupier as a dwelling-house whereof any part is used by the same occupier for any trade or manufacturing purpose for which water is required (r). Water supplied for domestic purposes incidental to a trade is not water supplied for the purposes of such trade within the meaning of that provision (s), nor does such a provision extend to water supplied for non-domestic purposes to public institutions like workhouses (t). Such water is usually supplied and charged for by meter (u). Undertakers are also commonly authorised by their special Act to supply water for domestic purposes by measure (a); and this is done by agreement between them and the consumer (b).

Pressure.

555. The supply for the domestic use of the inhabitants must be constantly laid on at such a pressure as will make the water reach the top story of the highest houses within the said limits, unless it is provided by the special Act that the water to be supplied by the undertakers need not be constantly laid on under pressure (c).

(p) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 12. Some of these purposes may be deemed domestic, others non-domestic, while a third class are trade purposes. Water used for washing a carriage or motor car used by a medical man in connexion with his practice is not used for a trade or business (Harrogate Corporation v. Mackay, [1907] 2 K. B. 611).

The undertakers must cause pipes to be laid down and water to be brought to every part of the town or district within the limits of the special Act whereunto they are required by so many owners or occupiers of houses in that part of the town or district as that the aggregate amount of water rate payable by them annually, at the rates specified in the special Act, is not less than one-tenth part of the expense of providing and laying down such pipes. No such requisition is, however, binding on the undertakers unless such owners or occupiers severally execute an agreement binding themselves to take such supply for three successive years at least (d).

pipes.

If for twenty-eight days after demand in writing made to the undertakers, and tender made of an agreement, signed by such number of owners and occupiers as aforesaid, to take and pay for a supply of water for three years or more, the undertakers refuse or neglect to lay down pipes and to provide such supply of water as aforesaid, or as provided by the special Act, they become liable to forfeit to each of such owners and occupiers the amount of rate which he would be liable to pay under such agreement, and also the sum of forty shillings for every day during which they shall refuse or neglect to lay down such pipes or to provide such supply of water. The undertakers are not liable to any penalty for not supplying water if the want of such supply arises from frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable cause or accident (e).

Failure to lay pipes.

SECT. 3.—Public Purposes.

557. In all the pipes to which any fire-plug is fixed (f) the undertakers must provide and keep constantly laid on, unless prevented by frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable accident (g), or during necessary repairs, a sufficient supply of water for the following purposes: for cleansing the sewers and drains, for when a special Act otherwise provides, see Purnell v. Wolverhampton New Water Works Co. (1861), 10 C. B. (N. S.) 576. These provisions do not extend to a supply in bulk (Wombwell Urban District Council v. Dearne Valley Waterworks Co. (1907), 71 J. P. 415); as to supply in bulk, see p. 313, post. Questions on constant supply also arise under the provisions of special Acts; see Liverpool Corporation v. Brady (1897), 14 T. L. R. 11; Dublin Corporation v. Bray Township Commissioners, [1900] 2 I. R. 89. As to penalties for not keeping the pipes charged under pressure, see Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 43; p. 306, post.

The fact that a fire-plug is open and being used for extinguishing a fire is a good defence to a claim by another owner in respect of water from the same plug to extinguish another fire (*Campbell v. cleansing and watering the streets (h), and for supplying any public pumps, baths, or washhouses that may be established for the free use of the inhabitants, or paid for out of any poor rates or borough rates levied within the limits of the special Act (i). Such supply must be provided at such rates, in such quantities, and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the persons having the control and management of the streets (k) and the undertakers, or, in case of disagreement, as shall be settled by two justices, until an inspector be appointed, and thereafter by such inspector (l).

The undertakers may also in their discretion grant and furnish supplies of water for public baths and washhouses, bathing places and swimming baths, either without charge or on such other favourable terms as they shall think fit (m). They have a like power in regard to lodging-houses provided under the Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890 (n), Part III.

SECT. 4.—Exinction of Fires.

Fire-plugs in

The word "inspector" is defined as meaning an officer appointed under any local Act relating to the town or district supplied with water under the special Act for the purpose of inspecting or superintending works connected with the paving, drainage, or supply of water of such town or district, or an officer appointed under any general Act for executing the like duties with respect to such town or district, together with other towns or districts (ibid., s. 3). (o) See note (k), supra. It is the duty of urban authorities to cause fire-plugs in the main and other pipes belonging to them at such convenient distances, not more than one hundred yards from each other (p), and at such places as may be most proper for the supply of water for extinguishing any fire which may break out within the limits of the special Act. Disputes as to the number and position of such fire-plugs are to be settled by two justices, or, if an inspector is appointed, by such inspector (q).

SECT. 4.
Extinction
of Fires.

559. The undertakers must from time to time renew and keep in effective order every such fire-plug; and as soon as any such fire-plug is completed they must deposit a key thereof at each place within the limits of the special Act where any public fire-engine is kept, and in such other places as may be appointed by the persons having the control and management of the streets, and must put up a public notice in some conspicuous place in each street in which such fire-plug is situated showing its situation. This notice the undertakers may put up on any house or building in such street (r).

560. The cost of such fire-plugs, and the expense of fixing, placing, and maintaining them in repair and of providing the keys, must be defrayed by the persons having the control and management of the streets (a). Such persons are not, however, liable for these costs and expenses if the undertakers have placed the fire-plugs without being requested to do so (b).

Expenses.

561. The undertakers must also, at the request and expense of the owner or occupier of any work or manufactory situated in any street in which there is a pipe of the undertakers, place and maintain in effective order a fire-plug as near as conveniently may be to such work or manufactory. Such fire-plug may only be used for extinguishing fires (c).

Extinction of Fires.Supply of water to fire-plugs.

562. The undertakers must at all times keep charged with water all their pipes to which fire-plugs are fixed, unless prevented by frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable cause, or during necessary repairs, and at such a pressure as will make the water reach the top story of the highest house within the limits of supply (d), unless otherwise provided in the special Act (e). Failure to comply with this provision renders the undertakers liable to penalties, but not to an action for damages (f). The undertakers must allow all persons at all times to take and use such water for extinguishing fire without making compensation for the same, but such gratuitous supply can only be taken from pipes of the undertakers to which fire-plugs have been affixed (g).

penalties
incurred.

563. The undertakers are liable to a penalty of £10 if, except when prevented as aforesaid (h), they (1) neglect or refuse to fix, maintain, or repair such fire-plugs; or (2) neglect or refuse to furnish to the persons having the control or management of the streets a sufficient supply of water for the public purposes aforesaid upon such terms as shall have been agreed on or settled as aforesaid (i); or (3) neglect to keep their pipes charged under such pressure as aforesaid (j); or (4) neglect or refuse to furnish a supply of water to any owner or occupier entitled under the special or incorporated Acts to receive a supply of water during any part of the time for which the rates for such supply have been paid or tendered (k). In addition to the said penalty, they forfeit to the persons having the control and management of the streets and to every person having paid or tendered the rate the sum of 40s. for every day during which such refusal or neglect shall continue after notice in writing has been given to the undertakers of the want of supply (l).

SECT. 6.—Communication or Service Pipes.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Duties of Undertakers.

564. Before the owners and occupiers of premises can become entitled to demand a supply of water from the undertakers, communication or service pipes must be laid between the premises to be supplied and the mains of the undertakers. These may be laid by the owners or occupiers themselves, subject to the regulations and superintendence of the undertakers (o), but in regard to houses of small value the undertakers may be required to do this work at the expense of the owner or occupier (p). In laying these pipes, the undertakers have the same powers of breaking up the streets as they have in respect of their mains (q). Provision of service pipes

The general provisions in regard to the laying of these communication pipes apply also, with slight variations, to local authorities supplying water under their general powers; but they apply only in districts or parts of districts where the local authority lays any pipes for the supply of any of the inhabitants thereof (r).

565. The undertakers must upon the request of the owner of any dwelling-house (s) in any street in which pipes have been laid down by them (t), the annual value of which house does not exceed £10, or upon the request of the occupier, with the consent in writing of the owner or reputed owner of any such house or of the agent of any such owner (a), and upon payment or tender of Small houses,

(m) See the cases cited in note (f), p. 306, ante. It is not clear that the person injured would not also be entitled to an injunction; see Gale v. Rhymney and Aber Valleys Gas and Water Co. (1906), 67 J. P. 430, C. A.; and compare Weale v. West-Middlesex Waterworks (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 358; *Low v. If the undertakers neglect or refuse to lay down such communication pipes or other works when the terms above mentioned have been complied with, they are liable to forfeit to the person making the request the sum of £5, and a further sum of 40s. for every day the refusal or neglect continues after seven days from the making of the request and tender (d).

Rent for

566. The undertakers may charge for the pipes and works, in addition to the water rate, such reasonable annual rent as may be agreed upon or, in case of dispute, as shall be settled by two justices, or by an inspector when one is appointed (e). The rent is chargeable on and recoverable from the occupier, or on his default from the owner, of the house at the same times and in the same manner as water rates (f). Such pipes and other works are not subject to distress or to be taken in execution under process of law or sequestration in bankruptcy against the occupier or owner, unless he becomes the proprietor thereof (g).

Purchase of service pipes.

The owner or reputed owner of any house to which such communication pipes or other works have been laid by the undertakers may at any time become the proprietor thereof by paying off the amount then due to the undertakers in respect of the costs of providing and laying such pipes and works and all rent at that time due in respect thereof (h).

Failure to pay for water supply.

567. If the occupier for the time being of the house in which any communication pipes or other works or engines have been laid down by the undertakers refuses to pay for a supply of water, or if the house is unoccupied for twelve months, the undertakers may demand from the owner the amount of money expended supplying water under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55) (ibid., s. 57). They are also omitted in special Acts of local authorities; see Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 1. Any rent for pipes and works paid by an occupier under that provision may be deducted by him from any rent from time to time due from him to such owner (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 57).

(b) As to payment of rates, see pp. 314, 316, post.

(c) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 44; as to the meaning of "domestic purposes," see p. 301, ante; as to penalties for refusing to give a supply, see pp. 303, 306, ante.

(d) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 45.

(e) As to an inspector, see p. 304, ante. In the case of local authorities supplying water under their general powers, such disputes are to be settled by a court of summary jurisdiction (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 57).

(f) As to the recovery of water rates, see p. 318, post.

(g) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 44; see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 141; and pp. 317, 318, post.

by them in laying down the pipes, works and engines. If the owner after ten days' notice from the undertakers neglects or refuses to pay such money, the undertakers may enter the house and remove the pipes and works. The balance of the money, less the value of the pipes and works and arrears of rent in respect thereof, is recoverable, with the costs incurred, from the owner, or from the occupier for the time being, in the same manner as water rates. No greater sum, however, is recoverable from an occupier than the amount of rent for the time being owing by him, unless he refuse to disclose the amount of rent owing by him. The occupier is entitled to deduct from the rent payable by him the sum so recovered or which he shall have paid on demand (i).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Pipes to be Laid by Owners and Occupiers.

568. Any owner or occupier of any dwelling-house or part of a dwelling-house within the limits of the special Act who wishes water from the works of the undertakers brought into his premises, and who has paid or tendered to the undertakers the proportion of water rate in respect of such premises by the special or incorporated Acts directed to be paid in advance, may open the ground between the pipes of the undertakers and his premises, having first obtained the consent of the owners and occupiers of such ground (j), and lay any leaden or other pipes from such premises to communicate with the pipes of the undertakers (k). These pipes must be of a strength and material approved by the undertakers, or in case of dispute settled by two justices, or by an inspector when one is appointed (l).

owner or occupier.

569. Before an owner or occupier begins to lay any such pipe he must give the undertakers fourteen days' notice of his intention to do so (m); and before making the communication with the pipes of the undertakers he must give two days' notice to the undertakers of the day and hour when it is intended to make such communication (n).

Notices.

The communication must be made under the superintendence Superintendence of surveyor.

(i) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 46.

(j) As to his power to break up the streets, see p. 310, post. This, presumably, carries with it the right to lay the pipes in the subsoil of the street; see Schweder v. Worthing Gas Light and Coke Co. (No. 2), [1913] 1 Ch. 118. Apart from statutory powers, an owner of houses cannot lay pipes in the subsoil of streets without the consent of the owner of such subsoil, even with the consent of the local authority (Goodson v. Richardson (1874), 9 Ch. App. 221).

(k) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 48.

(l) Ibid. Regulations or bye-laws are usually made by undertakers in respect of these pipes. The Local Government Board has issued a series of model bye-laws or regulations dealing with this and other matters in regard to which undertakers have power to make bye-laws.

and according to the directions of the surveyor or other officer appointed for the purpose by the undertakers, unless he fails to attend at the time mentioned in the said notice (o).

The bore of any such communication pipe must not exceed the prescribed limits, and where no limits are prescribed it must not exceed half an inch, except with the consent of the undertakers (p). This restriction must, however, be subject to the right of the owner or occupier of a dwelling-house to have a sufficient supply of water for domestic purposes (q).

570. Any person who has laid down any pipe or other works, or who has become the proprietor thereof, may remove the same after having first given six days' notice in writing to the undertakers of his intention to do so and of the time of such proposed removal. He must also make compensation to the undertakers for any injury or damage to their pipes caused by the removal (r).

571. Any owner or occupier may open or break up so much of the pavement(s) of any street as is between the pipe of the undertakers and his house, building, or premises, and any sewer or drain therein, for any of the above purposes (t). He must do as

(o) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 49. Disputes as to the manner in which such pipe shall be made to communicate are settled by two justices, or by the inspector where one is appointed (ibid.). In the case of local authorities supplying water under their general powers the dispute is settled by a court of summary jurisdiction (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 57). If the communication is properly made, and the undertakers subsequently cut the connexion, they are liable for damages in respect of trespass and to be restrained by injunction from preventing the communication from being made; in this case the remedy is not recovery of a penalty for failure to supply water (Gale v. Rhymney and Aber Valleys Gas and Water Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 430, C. A.). The cost of certain works, such as valves to regulate the supply, if inserted in communication pipes to suit the requirements of the undertakers, may be payable by the undertakers (Ward v. Folkestone Waterworks Co. (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 334).

(p) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 50.

(q) Thus, in the absence of provision to the contrary, the owner or occupier may lay several pipes of the prescribed bore (South-West Suburban Water Co. v. St. Marylebone Union, [1904] 2 K. B. 174, per BUCKLEY, J., at p. 184; Dublin Corporation v. South Dublin Guardians, C. A. (undated), cited in Michael and Will's Gas and Water, 6th ed., p. 495).

(r) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 51. For a form of notice, compare Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 162. Removal of the pipes or works without giving such notice to the undertakers makes the person so doing liable to forfeit to the undertakers a sum not exceeding £5 over and above the damage to their pipes and works, damages for which can be recovered by action (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 51).

(s) The word "pavement" is not confined to the foot pavement (Glover v. East London Water Works Co. (1868), 16 W. R. 310).

(t) It is only for the above purposes, namely, for the laying or removal of service pipes and works, that an owner or occupier may open or break up a street. Only the undertakers may do so for purposes of repair, except where the right to do so is conferred on owners by statute, as for instance by the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 19; see pp. 339, 340, post. An owner may, however, open or break up a street to little damage as possible, and make compensation for any damage done in the execution of any such work (u). Every such owner or occupier desiring to break up the pavement of any street, or any sewer or drain therein, is subject to the same necessity of giving previous notice to the persons having the control or management of the same, and to the same control, restriction, and obligations in and during the time of breaking up and reinstating, and to the same penalties for any delay in regard thereto, as the undertakers are subject to by virtue of the special Act and the Acts incorporated therewith (a).

SECT. 8.

No owner or occupier of premises may make any alteration in any communication or service pipe, or in any apparatus connected therewith, without the consent of the undertakers (b).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Liability for Defective Works in Streets.

572. Where the undertakers, in the performance of their statutory duties, place a fire-plug (c) or stopcock (d) in a street, and persons are injured by falling over the fire-plug or stopcock, either because of its defective condition, or because of the defective state of the highway in which it is placed (e), the liability of the undertakers depends upon whether or not they have been guilty of lay a communication pipe to connect indirectly with the pipes of the undertakers through another service pipe if the undertakers consent (Pearson v. Tenterden Corporation (1910), 74 J. P. 405). As to breaking up to restore a connexion which has been severed, see Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Wilkinson (1879), 4 C. P. D. 410.

(u) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 52.

(a) Ibid. As to these provisions, see ibid., ss. 29—34; and pp. 274, 291, ante. The owner is therefore liable for improper reinstatement (Glover v. East London Water Works Co. (1868), 16 W. R. 310). For a form of notice of intention to break up pavement, compare Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 163.

(b) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 19; see p. 323, post. It is still a doubtful question whether an owner of premises or the undertakers are liable to repair communication pipes in the absence of provision in the special Act. As to the special provisions in the metropolitan area, see pp. 339, 340, post. If the undertakers break up the street, an owner may be liable to pay the cost of repairing a leak (Grind Junction Waterworks Co. v. Rodocanachi, [1904] 2 K. B. 230, distinguishing Chapman v. Fylde Waterworks Co., [1894] 2 Q. B. 599, C. A.). If the undertakers do the work, they cannot recover from the owner of the premises unless they show that he is the owner of the pipe (Colne Valley Water Co. v. Hall (1907), 72 J. P. 25, C. A.); and it is doubtful if they can recover then (ibid.; see S. C. (1907), 71 J. P. 173). On the other hand, if the owner or occupier does the repair, he cannot recover the cost from the undertakers unless he proves that they are the owners of the pipe (Parnell v. Portsmouth Waterworks Co. (1910), 75 J. P. 99).

(c) See pp. 304, 305, ante.

(d) See p. 292, ante.

(e) The same principles apply to damage caused by the bursting of fire-plugs; see Hancock v. Southwark and Vauxhall Waterworks Co., [1889] W. N. 198; Steggles v. New River Co. (1865), 13 W. R. 413, Ex. Ch., where it was held that a water company must take precautions to prevent bursting from ordinary frost. A water company will not, however, be liable for bursting due to exceptional frost (Blyth v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 1856, 11 Exch. 781).

tion or negligence (f). They are not, therefore, liable if the fire-plug or stopcock has been properly laid and constructed in the first instance, and has been maintained in a reasonably proper condition, and the injury is caused by the fire-plug or stopcock subsequently projecting above the pavement solely by reason of the ordinary wearing away of the highway (g). To render them liable it must be shown that the fire-plug or stopcock was improperly laid or constructed (h), or that the pavement was improperly reinstated (i), or that they have failed to keep the fire-plug or stopcock in proper repair (k). In the case of a stopcock, they are liable for failure to repair it even though it belongs to the owner of the house supplied, provided that the duty to repair is not cast upon the owner (l). If, however, the duty of keeping it in repair is cast upon the owner of the house (a), the undertakers are not liable (b).

SECT. 7.—Water for Trade and Non-domestic Purposes.

Extent of
right to be supplied.

573. Undertakers are commonly authorised to supply water for trade and other non-domestic purposes on such terms and conditions as they think fit. No person, however, is entitled to a supply of water for other than domestic purposes if such supply would interfere with the sufficiency of the supply for domestic purposes (c). The water is usually supplied by measure, and the special Act prescribes a limit of price per 1,000 gallons (d). Where the undertakers are authorised by their special Act to supply water for other than domestic purposes, they are not liable, in the absence of express stipulation under any agreement for such supply, to any penalty or damages for not supplying such water, if the want of such supply arises from frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable cause or accident (e).

(c) See Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 15. As to the distinction between domestic and non-domestic purposes, see p. 301, ante. Water required for domestic purposes in a workshop or factory, or like place, is not water required for trade purposes; see p. 302, ante. Local authorities, under their general powers, can also supply water for trade and non-domestic purposes; see p. 260, ante; see also Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 34), ss. 122, 123, which apply when incorporated.

SECT. 7.

Non-domestic Purposes.

SECT. 8.—Supply in Bulk.

574. Undertakers are also commonly authorised to supply water in bulk outside their limits of supply, and to enter into agreements for the purpose with any local authority, company or persons. The supply may be for any purpose and for such remuneration and on such terms and conditions and for such period as may be agreed upon (f). It is provided, however, that such supply is not to be given except with the consent of any company or person supplying water under parliamentary authority within the area to be supplied and of the local authority of the district comprising that area, or if and so long as such supply would interfere with the supply of water for domestic purposes within the limits of the special Act (g). Any water company may also contract to supply water to any local authority (h), or to another company within its area, who will distribute it (i).

Supply outside limits.

SECT. 9.—Charges for Supply.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Water Rates.

575. The charge made for water supplied for domestic purposes does not usually depend upon the quantity consumed, but takes the form of a rate based upon the value of the premises to which the supply is given (k). The special Act may also authorise the Rate based on value of premises.

Wakefield Rural Council*, [1905] 2 Ch. 516, C. A. A local authority agreeing to take a supply of water may, in the absence of stipulation to the contrary, sell part of it at a profit to another authority (Halifax Corporation v. Soothill Upper Local Board (1874), 31 L. T. 6). Local authorities have also power to supply water in bulk to adjoining authorities (Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 61; see p. 261, ante).

Annual value. 576. Under the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (m) the water rates, except as otherwise provided, must be paid by an are recoverable from the person requiring, receiving, or usin the supply of water, and are payable according to the annus value of the tenement supplied with water (n). Any disput arising as to such value is determined by two justices (o). Suc determination, in the case of a bonâ fide dispute, must be made befor the rates can be recovered (p), and undertakers may be restraine from cutting off the water supply for non-payment of rate while such a dispute is pending (q). The expression "annus value," in the absence of other provision in the special Act, mean the net annual value, that is to say, the gross value after deductin the burdens the premises have to bear (r), and it is the net annus value of the premises as they stand and are occupied (s). In som including "any rent, reward, or payment to be made to the undertaker for a supply of water" (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17 s. 3). A rent for water supplied under an agreement with a local authority made pursuant to the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 5 (see p. 262, ante), is a rate within the meaning of ibid. s. 256; see titl RATES AND RATING, Vol. XXIV., p. 29. A covenant by a lessor to pay al rates and taxes, in some cases includes a water rate for domestic purposes see title LANDLORD AND TENANT, Vol. XVIII., p. 492; Spanish Telegrap Co. v. Shepherd (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 202; Badcock v. Hunt (1888), 2 Q. B. D. 145, C. A.; Bourne and Tant v. Salmon and Gluckstein, Ltd. [1907] 1 Ch. 616, C. A.

(l) See Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 10. A closet connected with the sewers, but to which water is not laid on, is not chargeable as a water closet (Roberts v. South Essex Waterworks Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 404). As to supply at a high level, see West Middlesex Water-works Co. v. Suwerkroij (1829), 4 C. & P. 87.

(p) New River Co. v. Mather (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 442. Justices can however, determine the annual value in the same proceedings as are taken for the recovery of the rate (Lea v. Abergavenny Improvement Commissioner. (1885), 16 Q. B. D. 18). If the special Act authorises a minimum lump sum to be charged, as alternative to a rate, this sum can be recovered although there may have been a dispute as to the annual value (Coln Valley Water Co. v. Treharne (1884), 48 J. P. 279).

(q) Hayward v. East London Waterworks Co. (1884), 28 Ch. D. 138; compare Postmaster-General v. Nenagh Urban District Council, [1913] 1 I. R. 238. The owner or occupier must act with reasonable diligence to have the value determined (ibid.). Until the amount is determined the owner or occupier cannot recover the excess paid, or recover penalties for non-supply (Whiting v. East London Waterworks Co. (1884), Cab. & El. 331, compare Slater v. Burnley Corporation (1888), 59 L. T. 636; Slater v. Burnley Corporation (No. 2) (1889), 53 J. P. 535).

SECT. 9.
Charges for Supply.

577. In more recent special Acts the water rate for domestic purposes is based on the rateable value ascertained by the valuation list in force at the commencement of the quarter for which the rate accrues, or, if there is no such list in force, then by the last rate made for the relief of the poor (a). The special Act provides the maximum rates which the undertakers may charge, and these rates are frequently proportionately smaller as the premises increase in value (b). In the absence of special provision, undertakers are not bound to charge equal rates to owners or occupiers of houses of the same value (c).

Rateable
value.

578. When several houses or parts of houses in the separate occupation of several persons are supplied by one common pipe, the several owners or occupiers of such houses or parts of houses are liable to the payment of the same rates for the supply of water purposes is based on the annual value of the house as licensed premises (West Middlesex Waterworks Co. v. Coleman, Coleman v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co. (1885), 14 Q. B. A garden attached to a house is taken into account in estimating the value (Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Uren (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 637; Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Davies, [1897] 2 Q. B. 209). Birmingham Corporation* (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 195, which must, however, be read subject to Dobbs v. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. (1883), 9 App. Cas. 49. The expression “annual rack-rent” has been given different meanings according to the context; see Bristol Waterworks Co. v. Uren, supra; Stevens v. Barnet Gas and Water Co. (1888), 57 L. J. (M. C.) 82; Wilkinson v. Burry Water Board (1905), 92 L. T. 417. Where the provisions in two special Acts make the basis of charge ambiguous, the one more in favour of the public will be adopted (South Staffordshire Waterworks Co. v. Barrow (1897), 61 J. P. 661, C. A.); compare title STATUTES, Vol. XXVII., p. 153. As to the interpretation of conflicting enactments generally, see ibid., pp. 136, 138, note (c), 139 et seq. As to valuation in the Metropolis, see pp. 346, 347, post.

(a) Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 10. If the water rate is chargeable on the rateable value of a part only of any hereditament entered in the valuation list, such rateable value must be fairly apportioned to the part, the apportionment in case of dispute to be ascertained by a court of summary jurisdiction (ibid.); see also Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 56; Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 13; and p. 262, ante, p. 347, post. as they would be liable to if each house or part was supplied with water from the works of the undertakers by a separate pipe (d).

579. The owners of all dwelling-houses or parts of dwelling-houses occupied as separate tenements, the annual value of which houses or tenements does not exceed the sum of £10, are liable to the payment of the rates instead of the occupiers thereof. The provisions for the recovery of rates from occupiers apply to the owners of such houses and tenements (e). In recent special Acts it has been provided that in the case of houses let to monthly or weekly tenants, or tenants holding for any period less than a quarter of a year, the undertakers may require the owner, instead of the occupier, to pay the rate; but it may be recovered from the occupier and may be deducted by him from the rent due from time to time from him to the owner (f).

580. The rates are payable in advance by equal quarterly payments at Christmas Day, Lady Day, Midsummer Day and Michaelmas Day, and the first payment must be made at the time when the pipe by which the water is supplied is made to communicate with the pipes of the undertakers, or at the time when the agreement to take water from the undertakers is entered into (g). An occupier who takes possession in the course of a quarter is only liable from the day of his occupation, and for so much of that quarter's rate as is proportionate to the length of the occupation (h).

(d) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 69. As to the power of the undertakers to refuse supply by a common pipe, see note (p) p. 307, ante.

(e) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 72. The person receiving the rents of any such house or tenement from the occupier, either on his own account or as agent or receiver for any person interested therein, is to be deemed the owner of such house or tenement (ibid.) The person who collects the rents for a mortgagor or receiver, and not the receiver or mortgagor, is, therefore, to be deemed the owner (Metropolitan Water Board v. Brooks (1910), 75 J. P. 41, C. A.). An owner who pays the rates under this provision may be liable in respect of waste of the water supplied (Brock v. Harrison, [1899] 1 Q. B. 958). In the area of the Metropolitan Water Board the limit has been raised to £20 rateable value (Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.) s. 4). Where an owner, under the provision in the text, pays any such rate in respect of a house or part thereof occupied by a tenant under any lease or agreement made previously to the passing of the special Act, the tenant must repay to the owner all sums so paid by him during the continuance of the lease, unless the owner has agreed to pay the water rates. Such sums can be recovered as arrears of rent (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 73). As to cutting off the supply from such houses for non payment, see p. 320, post.

(f) See Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 11. No greater sum may be recovered at any one time from any such occupier than the amount of rent owing by him, or which has accrued due from him subsequent to the service upon him of a notice to pay the rate (ibid.).

(g) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 70. As to the dates of payment in the Metropolis, see note (f), p. 348, post; as to the right of the undertakers to recover under a special Act before their works are completed, but where a supply has been given, see *Sidebottom v. 581. The occupier of any dwelling-house or part of a dwelling-house liable to the payment of any water rate who gives notice (i) of his intention to discontinue the use of the water supplied by the undertakers, or who removes from his dwelling between any two quarterly days of payment, must pay the water rate in respect of such dwelling-house or part of a dwelling-house for the quarter ending on the quarterly day of payment next after his quitting the same or giving such notice (k). Where the owner is required to pay the rate in respect of small tenements, his liability ceases on the quarterly day of payment next after the house has become unoccupied (l).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Supply by Meter.

582. Special Acts commonly authorise undertakers to supply water by measure either for domestic or other purposes, and provide that the moneys payable in respect thereof are recoverable in the same manner as water rates, and the maximum price per gallon is prescribed (m). If a person desires to be so supplied, he must measure the amount supplied at his own expense and record that measurement (n).

583. Where the undertakers are so authorised to supply by measure, they may let for hire (o) to any consumer so supplied any meter or instrument for measuring the quantity of water supplied and consumed, and any pipes and apparatus for the conveyance, reception and storage of water, for such remuneration in money as may be agreed upon between them and the consumer, which remuneration is recoverable in the same manner as water rates. These meters, instruments, pipes, and apparatus are not subject to distress for rent of the premises where the same are used; nor are they liable to be attached or taken in execution under any process of law, or in pursuance of any proceedings in bankruptcy, against the consumer of the water or the occupier entry.

584. The officers of the undertakers may enter any house, building or lands, to, through, or into which water is supplied by them by measure, in order to inspect the meters, instruments, pipes, and apparatus for the measuring, conveyance, reception, or storage of water, or for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity of water supplied or consumed. They may also from time to time enter for the purpose of removing any meter etc. the property of the undertakers. If any person hinders any such officer from entering, or making such inspection, or effecting such removal, he is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for each offence, but, except with the consent of a justice, this power of entry may only be exercised between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. (q).

Interference with pipes or meters.

585. Special Acts also make persons liable to penalties who wilfully, fraudulently, or by culpable negligence injure, or suffer to be injured, any pipe, meter or other instrument for measuring water, or any other fittings belonging to the undertakers, and also who fraudulently alter the index of any such meter or instrument, or prevent it properly registering the amount of water supplied (r).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Recovery of Rates and Charges.

Recovery by action.

586. If any person refuses or neglects to pay to the undertakers any rate or sum due to them under their special Act, they may recover the same with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction (s).

Cutting off

(p) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 14; see title DISTRESS, Vol. XI., p. 141; and p. 308, ante. Recent water Acts extend the provisions of this enactment so as to authorise the undertakers to let for hire any water fittings to any person supplied by them with water; fittings are protected from distress and execution if conspicuously marked as belonging to the undertakers; see Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 21.

(q) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 15.

(r) See Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 20. The undertakers may also recover the damage sustained by them, and may enter the premises of the offender and repair the injury, and do such things as are necessary to ensure the proper registering of the water supplied, and the expense of doing so is payable by the person offending and may be recovered as water rates (ibid.). Any person connecting or disconnecting any meter may also be required to give twenty-four hours' notice in writing to the undertakers of his intention to do so, and all alterations or repairs, and the connecting or disconnecting of meters, must be done at his expense, and under the superintendence of an officer of the undertakers; otherwise he may be liable to a penalty not exceeding 40s. (ibid., clause 19).

(s) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 21. The remedy under this provision is in addition to any other remedies for the recovery of these rates or sums (ibid.). As to a remedy by distress under a special Act, see Richards v. West Middlesex Waterworks Co. (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 660. rate (t), neglects to pay the same at any of the designated times of payment (a), the undertakers may, except in the cases mentioned hereafter (b), stop the water from flowing into the premises in respect of which such rate is payable by cutting off the pipe to such premises, or by such means as the undertakers think fit (c), and may recover the rate due from such person, if less than £20, with the expenses of cutting off the water and costs of recovering the rate, before two justices, who may order the same to be paid, and on the expiration of seven days after demand of the amount so ordered by warrant of distress (d). If the rate due amounts to £20 or upwards, the undertakers may recover the same, with the expenses of cutting off the water, in any court of competent jurisdiction (e). It is not a condition precedent to recovering the amount of the water rate before two justices that the water should be cut off (f). The Summary Jurisdiction Acts (g) apply to these proceedings before justices, so that the complaint must be made to the justices within six months from the time when such matter of complaint arose (h), but the limitation does

(t) "Water rate" includes any rent, reward or payment to be made to the undertakers for a supply of water (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 3), and includes a sum payable for a bath (Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Carter, Same v. Brooks (1882), 8 Q. B. D. 632), or under an implied agreement (Trowbridge Water Co. v. Wills County Council, [1909] 1 K. B. 824).

(b) See p. 320, post.

(c) A company may be restrained if it threatens improperly to cut off the water (Hayward v. East London Waterworks Co. (1884), 28 Ch. D. 138), or if, having done so, it prevents communication being made (Gale v. Rhymney and Aber Valleys Gas and Water Co. (1903), 67 J. P. 430, C. A.).

(d) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 73. The undertakers may recover the rate and costs of cutting off in the same manner as any damages for the recovery of which no special provision is made are recoverable by that or the special Act (ibid.). By ibid., s. 85, it is provided that the clauses of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), with respect to the recovery of damages not specially provided for, and of penalties, and to the determination of any other matter referred to justices, are to be incorporated for this purpose. Such damages are ascertained and determined by two justices and may be recovered by distress (ibid., s. 140). The determination of the sum to be paid amounts to an order to pay the sum (East London Waterworks Co. v. Charles, [1894] 2 Q. B. 730, per WILLS, J., at p. 733). The costs of the recovery appears to be in the discretion of the justices (Ruabon Water Co. v. Evans (1906), 22 T. L. R. 541). If the special Act prescribes another method of recovering the rate, those provisions do not apply (Meltham Spinning Co., Ltd. v. Huddersfield Corporation (1903), 89 L. T. 403, C. A.).

It is not quite clear whether or not a demand is required before proceedings can be taken. When a local authority supplying water under its general powers seeks to recover a water rate, the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 256, is applicable, and a written demand is required, and fourteen days must elapse before proceedings are begun before justices. In such a case the six months' limit runs from the expiration of such not apply to proceedings before other courts of competent jurisdiction (i).

588. A water company which is a trading company and supplying water for profit, and whose special Act or provisional order incorporates any part of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (k), must not cut off the supply of water for non-payment of the water rate where the owner and not the occupier is liable by law or by agreement with the company to the payment of the water rate in respect of any dwelling-house or part of a dwelling-house occupied as a separate tenement (l). Such water rate, however, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, computed from the expiration of one month from the time when the same has been claimed by the company until receipt thereof, becomes a charge on such dwelling-house in priority to all other charges affecting the premises (m). The amount may also be recovered, with the costs incurred, from the owner or from the occupier for the time being, in the same manner as water rates may by law be recovered. Proceedings against the occupier cannot, however, be taken until notice has been given to him, or left at his dwelling-house, to pay the amount due for water rate out of the rent then due, or that may thereafter become due from him, and he has omitted to pay such rate (n) demand (Elliott v. Russell, [1902] 2 K. B. 748). If the amount due is known to the person owing the money, it seems that a formal demand in writing or otherwise is not necessary (East London Waterworks Co. v. Kyffin, [1895] 1 Q. B. 55); but if the amount is not so known a demand seems to be necessary; see Elliott v. Russell, supra, per Lord ALVERSTONE C.J., at p. 753; and compare Labalmondiere v. Addison (1858), 1 E. & E. 41. As to cases where there is a dispute as to the annual value of the house, see p. 314, ante.

The company cannot cut off the supply even if the premises become vacant after the date when the water rate became due (Metropolitan Water Board v. Bibbey, [1911] 2 K. B. 74; see p. 352, post). A company may, however, cut off the water for other reasons than non-payment of rate, as, for example, where a tenant after notice to quit refuses to go and the owner requests the company to cut off the supply (Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Paulet (1888), 52 J. P. 724). If the company cuts off the supply wrongly it is liable to penalties for failure to supply, and a dispute as to compliance with new regulations relating to communication pipes affords no answer if not properly determined (South West Suburban Water Co. v. Hardy, supra). As to cutting off the supply by reason of waste or misuse of water, see p. 322, post.

(m) Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 21), s. 4. This is without prejudice to the other remedies of the company for enforcing payment of the rate from the owner (ibid.).

(n) Ibid. The right of recovery is without prejudice to such charge. No greater sum can at any one time be recovered from any such occupier than the amount of rent owing by him or which shall have accrued due from him since such notice was given. The occupier is entitled to deduct from the rent payable by him the sum so recovered from him or which he has so paid on demand (ibid.). The effect of the provision in the text is

A company cutting off the supply contrary to the above provision becomes liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for each day during which the water remains cut off. The penalty, which is recoverable summarily, is paid to the person aggrieved (o).

SECT. 10.—Waste and Misuse of Water Supplied.

590. Provisions against the waste and misuse of water by consumers are contained in the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 (r) and 1863 (s). Where both are incorporated in special Acts, as is the usual practice, some of the provisions in the earlier Act are displaced by the more extended provisions in the later Act (t). In cases where a constant supply of water is to be afforded there is usually inserted in the special Act or provisional order a power enabling the undertakers to make bye-laws or regulations for the purpose of preventing the waste, undue consumption, misuse, or contamination of water, and by such bye-laws to prescribe the size, nature, materials, workmanship, and strength and mode of arrangement, connexion, disconnexion, alteration and repair of pipes, meters, cocks, ferrules, valves, soil-pans, water-closets, baths, cisterns, and other apparatus to be used, and to forbid any arrangements or use of these which may tend to waste, undue consumption, misuse, erroneous measurement, or contamination (a).

(o) Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 21), s. 5. The occupier is prima facie the person aggrieved, but the owner may also be so if by reason of the wrongful cutting off of the water he is unable to let his premises (Metropolitan Water Board v. Bibbey, [1911] 2 K. B. 74, per Lord ALVERSTONE, C.J., at p. 79); see also Sheffield Waterworks Co. v. Wilkinson (1879), 4 C. P. D. 410. (t) Thus, the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 55, 59, are repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 66), so far as they relate to special Acts with which the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), is incorporated.

(a) Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 14. The clause limits the application of the bye-laws to the case of premises to which the undertakers are bound to afford, and do in fact afford, or are prepared on demand to afford, a constant supply. The provisions relating to the making of bye-laws in the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 182—186 (see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 388 et seq.), are usually

591. If both of the above Acts are incorporated, the following provisions apply:—(1) any person acting under the authority of the undertakers may between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. enter any house or premises supplied with water under the special Act, in order to examine if there is any waste or misuse of such water (b); (2) if any person supplied with water by the undertakers wrongfully does, or causes or permits to be done, anything in contravention of any of the provisions of the special Act, or wrongfully fails to do anything required by such provisions to be done for the prevention of waste, misuse, undue consumption or contamination of the water of the undertakers, the undertakers may cut off any of the pipes by which the water is supplied to him and cease to supply him so long as the cause of injury remains or is not remedied (c).

592. If both Acts are incorporated the following persons are liable to penalties:—

(1) any person supplied with water who wilfully or negligently causes or suffers any pipe, valve, cock, cistern, bath, soil-pan, water-closet or other apparatus or receptacle to be out of repair or to be so used or contrived as that the water supplied is or is likely to be wasted, misused, unduly consumed or contaminated, or so as to occasion or allow the return of foul air or other noisome or impure matter into any pipe belonging to or connected with the pipes of the undertakers (d);

(2) any owner or occupier of any tenement supplied with water under the special Act who supplies to any other person, or wilfully permits him to take, any such water from any cistern or pipe in such tenement unless for the purpose of extinguishing fire, or unless he is a person supplied with water by the undertakers, and the pipes belonging to him are out of repair without his default (e);

made to apply to the making of these bye-laws subject to the necessary modifications. The Local Government Board has issued a model series of such bye-laws or regulations. Recent special Acts empower undertakers, including local authorities as well as companies, if required by the consumer, to supply, repair or alter, but not to manufacture, pipes, valves, cocks, cisterns, baths, meters, soil-pans, water-closets, and other fittings required or permitted by their regulations, and to charge the consumer in respect thereof. If let for hire they are protected from distress and from being taken in execution, provided that they have a distinguishing mark on them to show that they are the property of the undertakers. Provision is also made limiting the charges to be made for such fittings (Model Water Bill, 1913, clause 21).

(b) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 57. If the surveyor is refused admission or prevented from making the examination, the undertakers may turn off the water supplied by them from such houses or premises (ibid.).

(4) any person who, not having from the undertakers a supply of water for other than domestic purposes, uses for other than domestic purposes any water supplied to him by them (g);

(5) any person who, having from the undertakers a supply of water for any other than domestic purposes, uses for any purposes other than those for which he is entitled to use the same any water supplied to him by the undertakers (h);

(6) any owner or occupier of premises supplied with water by the undertakers, any consumer of the water of the undertakers, or any other person who affixes, or causes or permits to be affixed, any pipe or apparatus to a pipe belonging to the undertakers or to a communication or service pipe belonging to or used by such owner, occupier, consumer or other person, or who makes any alteration in any such communication or service pipe, or in any apparatus connected therewith, without the consent of the undertakers (i);

(f) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 20. The person is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for every such offence (ibid.). If the Act of 1863 is not incorporated in the special Act, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), is incorporated, then the following provision in ibid., s. 59, has effect:—Every person who, not having agreed to be supplied with water by the undertakers, takes any water from any reservoir, watercourse or conduit belonging to the undertakers or any pipe leading to any such reservoir, watercourse, or conduit, or from any cistern or other like place containing water belonging to the undertakers other than such as may have been provided for the gratuitous use of the public, is liable to forfeit to the undertakers for every such offence a sum not exceeding £10. As to the limited nature of this provision, see Piercy v. Pope (1881), 30 W. R. 60, where it was held that it did not provide any penalty for improperly taking water from a tap in an unoccupied house.

(g) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 18. The penalty is a fine not exceeding 40s. for each offence without prejudice to the right of the undertakers to recover from the offender the value of the water misused (ibid.). If a dairyman uses water supplied for domestic purposes in order to wash his yard and a milk float, he commits an offence (Cambridge Waterworks Co. v. Hancock (1910), 74 J. P. 477); see pp. 301, 302, ante. As to the use of water, already used for ordinary domestic purposes, for flushing purposes, see Evans v. Gornall (1892), 8 T. L. R. 602; Andrews v. Wills (1901), 65 J. P. 281.

(h) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 18. As to the penalty and right to recover value of water, see note (g), supra; as to the liability of an occupier for wrongful acts of his workmen, see West Middlesex Water-works Co. v. Swanekrop (1829), 4 C. & P. 87. If rate-payers are entitled to use water from standpipes for domestic purposes, washing carts, and extinguishing fires, they commit an offence if they use the water for purposes of their trade (Andrews v. Wills, supra). Water supplied by measure is also the subject of larceny (Perens v. O'Brien (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 21).

(i) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), s. 19. The penalty is a sum not exceeding £5 for each offence, without prejudice to the right of the undertakers to recover damages from the offender for any injury done to their property and to their right to recover the value of any water wasted, misused, or unduly consumed (ibid.). An offence is committed if a person temporarily affixes a hose-pipe to a tap to draw off water (Cambridge Waterworks Co. v. Hancock, supra), or affixes a tap to shut off the water while the house is closed (Williams v.

593. Where the special Act provides that the water need not be constantly laid on under pressure, any person supplied with water must, when required by the undertakers, provide a proper cistern to hold the water supplied, with a ball and stopcock in the pipe bringing the water from the works of the undertakers to such cistern, and must keep such cistern, ball and stopcock in good repair, so as effectually to prevent the water from running to waste. If any person, when so required, neglects to provide these and keep them in repair, the undertakers may cut off the pipe, and turn off the water from the premises of such person until such cistern, ball and stopcock is provided and repaired, as the case may require (l). The undertakers may also repair any such cistern, pipe, ball or stopcock so as to prevent waste, and recover the expenses thereof from the person allowing it to be out of repair (m).

If the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 93), is incorporated with the special Act, the penalty provided by ibid., s. 17, applies to breaches of the above requirement; but if it is not incorporated, then the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 55, applies, whereby every person supplied with water by the undertakers who suffers any such cistern, pipe, ball or stopcock to be out of repair, so that the water supplied is wasted, is liable to forfeit to the undertakers for every such offence a sum not exceeding £5. For forms of notices by a local authority to a person supplied with water to provide or repair a cistern, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 180.

Of these provisions of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 146, 147, 151, 153, 155, and in part ss. 157, 160, have been repealed. Ibid., s. 160, which related to perjury, and the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 89, which

595. For the purpose of preventing the inhabitants of any district from being deprived of their water supply by reason of strikes or other breaches of contract of service, the malicious breach of a contract of service on the part of any person employed by a municipal authority, or by any company or contractor supplying water to a town, district, or other place, is a misdemeanour, if the person knows or has reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequence of his doing so will be to deprive the inhabitants to a great extent of their supply of water (s).

Part V.—Finance.

SECT. 1.—Local Authorities.

596. When local authorities supply water under their general powers (t), their borrowing and expenditure are governed by the general provisions of the Public Health Acts (u). When they supply water under a special Act or provisional order, provision is generally made therein for borrowing and repaying the capital moneys required, and for the application of the profits (x). related to the same matter, were repealed by the Perjury Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 6), which consolidated the law on this matter; see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 734 et seq.; and as to perjury, generally, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 490 et seq. Anything in the special or incorporated Acts authorised or required to be done by two justices may be done by any one magistrate having by law authority to act alone for any purpose with the powers of two or more justices (Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 87).

(x) The provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), with respect to profits, are not applicable; see p. 327, post.

SECT. 1.
Local Authorities.

Act usually authorises the borrowing of sums for certain specific purposes, and such additional sums for the capital purposes of the undertaking, as the Local Government Board may sanction (y). The repayment is charged on the undertaking, or if necessary on the district fund or general district rate (a). The money is allowed to be repaid either by equal yearly or half-yearly instalments of principal or of principal and interest combined, or by means of a sinking fund, or partly by one of these methods and partly by another (b). Returns must be made to the Board with respect to the repayment of the debt (c). Power is also given to borrow for the purpose of paying off moneys previously borrowed which are intended to be repaid forthwith, and also to replace moneys temporarily applied from other funds of the authority in repaying moneys previously borrowed and intended to be replaced by borrowed moneys (d).

Application
of receipts.

597. The local authority is commonly required to apply all money received by it in respect of its water undertaking, except moneys borrowed or received on capital account, for the purposes and in the order following:—

(1) in payment of the working and establishment expenses and cost of maintenance of the undertaking;

(2) in payment of interest on moneys borrowed for the purposes of the undertaking;

(3) in providing the requisite appropriations, instalments, or sinking fund payments, in respect of moneys borrowed for the purposes of the undertaking;

(4) in extending and improving, if the authority thinks fit, any works for the purposes of the undertaking;

(5) in providing a reserve fund, if the authority thinks fit, to meet deficiency in the income from the undertaking and any extraordinary claim or for renewing part of the undertaking (e). The balance, less a sum for current expenses, is in some cases to be carried to the district fund or rate, which is also made liable to make

(y) It is not usual to allow borrowed moneys to be used for purposes which should properly be charged to income.

(a) As to the funds of local authorities, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 280 et seq. (urban districts) 335 et seq. (rural districts).

(b) See Hastings Corporation (Water and Finance) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. xxxix.). The sinking fund may be either a non-cumulating sinking fund, formed by the payment of equal annual sums throughout the whole period as will together amount to the moneys for the repayment of which the fund is formed, or an accumulating sinking fund, formed by the payment of an annual sum which, with interest thereon at a prescribed rate per cent., will make up the amount.

(c) Model Bills and Clauses, 1913, Miscellaneous, clause 18. This is a general clause inserted in all Bills authorising local authorities to borrow money where provision is made for the repayment of the debt.

(d) Model Bills and Clauses, 1913, Miscellaneous, clause 17. The authority is, however, prohibited from borrowing to replace borrowed money which has been repaid by instalments, or by means of a sinking fund or out of other capital moneys (ibid.).

(e) The maximum amount of the reserve fund is usually prescribed, but if any part of it is used for authorised purposes, it may be made good out of the income.

good deficiencies in the revenue received from the undertaking (f), while in other cases it is to be applied in reduction of the charges for water (g).

SECT. 1.
Local Authorities,

598. The local authority must keep separate accounts in respect of its water undertaking, distinguishing capital and revenue, and must have these made up and balanced annually and audited in like manner, and with the like consequences, as its other accounts (h).

Accounts.

SECT. 2.—Statutory Companies.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Capital.

599. The special Act authorising a statutory company to carry on a water undertaking usually prescribes the amount of the company's capital, and authorises the issue of shares. Borrowing powers are also conferred up to a certain proportion of the paid-up capital (i). Existing companies frequently apply for and are granted powers to raise additional capital, with correspondingly increased borrowing powers (j). The issue of shares and stock of existing companies is now made subject to the "auction clause," which requires such shares or stock to be offered for sale by public auction or tender (k), and this is sometimes extended to the loan stock. Holders of new shares and stock are given the same privileges, liabilities, and rights as holders of the same class of the other shares and stocks (l).

Powers

clause."

SUB-SECT. 2.—Profits.

600. The special Act provides for a limit of dividend, usually 10 per cent. on the original capital, and as regards any new capital dividend.

(g) See Fylde Waterworks (Transfer) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. cccxxi.).

(h) See Model Bills and Clauses, 1913, Miscellaneous, clause 19; see also title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 283 et seq. (urban districts), 337, 338 (rural districts). In the case of joint water boards, the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 58, is made to apply to the accounts of the board and of their committees and officers, and to the audit thereof.

(i) The issue of capital and other like matters are usually governed by the provisions of the Companies Clauses Acts, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 16) and 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 118), and Acts amending the same, so far as these are incorporated in the special Act. The special Act sometimes contains a clause against the conversion of borrowed money into capital. As to statutory companies generally, see title COMPANIES, Vol. V., pp. 674 et seq. For the clauses commonly inserted in the special Acts of such companies, see Model Railway Bill, 1913, clauses 9-16.

(j) See Model Gas Bill, 1913, clauses 6-9. The moneys, including premiums received, are generally required to be applied to purposes to which the capital is properly applicable. Any sum of money received as premium is not considered as part of the capital of the undertakers entitled to dividend (ibid., clause 9).

(k) Ibid., clause 15; for particulars of this clause, see title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 370; as to the Standing Order relating to the insertion thereof in Bills, see p. 271, ante.

issued 7 per cent. on ordinary capital, and 5 per cent. on preference capital. The provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (m), with respect to the amount of profit to be received by the undertakers when the waterworks are carried on for their benefit are made applicable to such companies.

The profits of the undertaking to be divided among the undertakers in any year must not exceed the prescribed rate; if there is no prescribed rate, then they must not exceed the rate of 10 per cent. per annum on the paid-up capital of the undertaking, and this is deemed the prescribed rate unless a larger dividend is at any time necessary to make up the deficiency of any previous dividend which has fallen short of the said yearly rate (n).

Reserve fund.

601. If the clear profits in any year amount to a larger sum than is sufficient, after making up the deficiencies in previous dividends, to make a dividend at the prescribed rate, the excess must from time to time be invested in Government or other securities, and the dividends and interest arising from such securities must also be invested in the same or like securities, in order that the sum may accumulate at compound interest until the sum so formed amounts to the prescribed sum, or if no sum is prescribed, to a sum equal to one-tenth part of the nominal capital of the undertakers. This sum is to form a reserve fund to answer any deficiency which may at any time happen in the amount of divisible profits, or to meet any extraordinary claim or demand which may at any time arise against the undertakers; and if such fund is at any time reduced, it may thereafter be again restored to the said sum, and so from time to time as often as such reduction shall happen (o). No sum may, however, be taken from the said fund for the purpose of meeting any extraordinary claim unless it is first certified by two justices that the sum is required for the purpose of an extraordinary claim within the meaning of the special and incorporated Acts (p).

When the reserve fund, by accumulation or otherwise, amounts

(m) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17, ss. 75—82; compare title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 366. If incorporated in a special Act of an existing company, the provisions extend to the whole undertaking (Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Co. (1904), 20 T. L. R. 687, H. L.).

(n) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 75. Where preference stock has been issued by a company at less than 10 per cent., but no rate has been prescribed in the special Act in respect of such stock, the rate at which such stock was in fact issued is the prescribed rate, and if dividends are paid at that rate there is no deficiency to be made good (Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1904] 2 K. B. 77, C. A.). A company which has had the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), incorporated by a later special Act cannot make up to 10 per cent. the dividends paid previously to such special Act, if the earlier Acts of such company contained no prescribed rate (Kent Waterworks (Company of Proprietors) v. Lamplough, [1904] A. C. 27). The dividend of 10 per cent. may not be paid free of income tax (Ashton Gas Co. v. A.-G., [1906] A. C. 10). In the case of arrears of dividends, where new shares have been issued at a lower prescribed rate than the original shares, the payments should be made in the same proportion as the prescribed rates (Weymouth Waterworks Co. v. Coode and Hasell, [1911] 2 Ch. 520).

to the prescribed sum or to one-tenth of the nominal capital, as the case may be, the interest and dividends thereon must no longer be invested, but are to be applied to any of the general purposes of the undertaking to which the profits are applicable (q).

If in any year the profits divisible do not amount to the prescribed rate, such a sum may be taken from the reserve fund as, with the actual profits of the year, will enable the undertakers to make a dividend of the amount aforesaid, and so from time to time as occasion requires (r).

602. On the petition of any two payers of water rate within the limits of the special Act the court of quarter sessions (s) may appoint some accountant or other competent person (t), not being a proprietor of any waterworks, to examine and ascertain (a), at the expense of the undertakers, the actual state and conditions of the concerns of the undertakers, and make report to the court at the same or some following sessions. The court may examine any witnesses upon oath touching the truth of the said accounts and the matters therein referred to. If it thereupon appears to the court that the profits for the preceding year have exceeded the prescribed rate, the undertakers must, in case the whole of the reserved fund has been and remains invested, and the dividends to the amount limited have been paid, make such a rateable reduction in the rates for water to be furnished by them as in the judgment of the court seems proper, but so as such rates when reduced shall ensure to the undertakers, regard being had to the amount of profit before received, a profit as near as may be to the prescribed rate (b).

Reduction of water rate.

If it appears to the court that there was no sufficient ground for presenting the petition, the court may, if it thinks fit, order the petitioners to pay the whole or any part of the costs of or incident to such petition, the amount thereof to be determined by the court. Such costs are recoverable summarily or otherwise as provided in the special Act (c).

(q) Waterworks (Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 78.

(r) Ibid., s. 79.

(s) "Quarter sessions" may be defined in the special Act; if not, it means the court of general or quarter sessions of the peace which shall be held at the place nearest to the waterworks, or the principal office thereof, for the county or place in which the waterworks, or the principal office thereof, is situate, or for some division of such county having a separate commission of the peace (ibid., s. 3); see, generally, title MAGISTRATES. Vol. XIX., pp. 618 et seq.

(t) The court can appoint only one person; see R. v. Brindley (1885), 54 L. T. 435 (gas company).

(a) The undertakers are liable to penalties if they refuse or neglect to produce any books of account or other books, bills, vouchers, or papers relating to their pecuniary affairs, for seven days after being required to produce any of the same to the court, accountant or other person aforesaid (Waterworks (Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 82). The penalty is £100 for every such refusal or wilful neglect, and a further £10 for every day during which such refusal or wilful neglect continues after the expiration of the seven days. Such penalties may be recovered by any person who will sue for the same, with full costs of suit, in any of the superior courts (ibid.).

(c) Ibid., s. 81. The costs are recoverable in the same way as damages

SECT. 2.

Statutory Companies.Abstract of accounts.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Accounts.

603. In each year after the undertakers have begun to supply water under their special Act they must cause an account in abstract to be prepared of the whole receipt and expenditure of all rates or other moneys levied under the powers of their special and incorporated Acts for the year preceeding, under the several distinct heads of receipt and expenditure, with a statement of the balance of such account, duly audited and certified by the chairman of the undertakers, and also by the auditors thereof, if any (d). A copy of such special account must be sent free of charge to the clerk of the county council for the county (e) in which the waterworks are situated on or before the 31st day of January in each year, under a penalty of £20 for each default. The copy of each account must be kept by the clerk, and be open to inspection by all persons, at all reasonable hours, on payment of 1s. for each inspection (f).

Part VI.—Metropolitan Water Supply.

SECT. 1.—The Metropolitan Water Board.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Formation, Constitution, and Powers.

Limits of supply.

604. The Metropolis (g) and a large area round it is supplied with water by the Metropolitan Water Board, which was established in 1902 (h) for the purpose of acquiring by purchase, and of managing and carrying on, the undertakings of the nine metropolitan water companies then in existence (i), and generally for the purpose of supplying water within the parishes and places in which, at the date of transfer (k), any of those companies were authorised to supply water, subject to certain alterations made are recoverable under that Act; see pp. 324, 325, ante. As to summary procedure, see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 589 et seq.

(d) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 83. Recent special Acts contain a provision that the accounts must be certified by a properly qualified auditor.

(f) Ibid., s. 83.

(g) See title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., p. 392.

(h) By the Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 41).

(i) These companies were the New River Company, the East London Waterworks Company, the Southwark and Vauxhall Water Company, the West Middlesex Waterworks Company, the Lambeth Waterworks Company, the Chelsea Waterworks Company, the Grand Junction Waterworks Company, the Kent Waterworks Company, and the Staines Reservoirs Joint Committee (ibid., Sched. I.). Certain of the property of the New River Company was excluded (ibid., s. 9). As to the Staines Reservoirs Joint Committee, see ibid., s. 10.

(k) The date of transfer was the 24th June, 1904, but in the case of the New River Company was the 25th July, 1904. This is referred to in the Act as "the appointed day" (ibid., ss. 2, 37).

by the Act (l). This area constitutes the limits of supply (m). The Board must also supply water in bulk to the councils of certain other districts (n).

SECT. 1.
The Metropolitan Water Board.

Constitution of Board.

605. The Board consists of a chairman and vice-chairman and members appointed by the various county, city, borough and district councils within the limits of supply in certain proportions, and by the conservators of the rivers Thames and Lee (o). The chairman and vice-chairman are appointed by the Board, either from among the members or from outside, and may be paid salaries. The Board is a body corporate with a common seal,

(l) Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7. c. 41), s. 1, Sched. II. The alterations effected by the Act may be summarised thus. The parishes of Sunbury and Chessington, which were being supplied with water without authority, were included in the area (ibid., Sched. II.). The undertakings of the councils of the urban districts of Tottenham and Enfield were transferred to the Board, and the Board was required to continue the supply (ibid., s. 11). Such parts of the boroughs of Croydon and Richmond and of the urban districts of Cheshunt and Ware as were within the limits of supply were excluded, and the right of supply in such parts was conferred on the councils of these boroughs and districts (ibid., s. 12). Provision was, however, made for the Board to supply these councils in bulk (ibid., s. 13).

(m) Ibid., s. 1. It comprises a population of over 7,000,000, and an area of nearly 350,000 acres. The rights of certain undertakers within the area are, however, protected (ibid., ss. 32-36; and see Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7. c. clxxi.), s. 36), and variations in the limits may be made in certain cases by the Local Government Board by provisional order (Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7. c. 41), s. 26).

(n) Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7. c. 41), ss. 13, 14; see the saving of these in the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7. c. clxxi.).

(o) The members are appointed thus:—County councils: London, 14; Essex, 1; Kent, 1; Middlesex, 1; Surrey, 1; Hertfordshire, 1. City councils: London, 2; Westminster, 2. Borough councils: Metropolitan boroughs (see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX. pp. 402, 403), 1 each; West Ham, 2. Urban districts: East Ham, 1; Leyton, 1; Walthamstow, 1; Tottenham, 1; Willesden, 1. Certain groups of councils are allowed to elect one member each. These groups are:—(1) The urban district councils of Buckhurst Hill, Chingford, Loughton, Waltham Holy Cross, Wanstead and Woodford; (2) the urban district councils of Beckenham, Bromley, Chislehurst, Penge, Bexley, Dartford, Erith and Footscray; (3) the borough council of Ealing and the urban district councils of Acton and Chiswick; (4) the urban district councils of Brentford, Hampton, Hampton Wick, Hanwell, Heston and Isleworth, Sunbury, Teddington and Twickenham; (5) the urban district councils of Edmonton, Enfield and Southgate; (6) the borough council of Hornsey and the urban district council of Wood Green; (7) the borough council of Kingston and the urban district councils of East and West Molesey, Esher and the Dittons, Ham, Surbiton, Barnes, the Maldens and Combe and the borough council of Wimbledon. These groups appoint joint committees who appoint the member. The Conservators of the river Thames (see titles METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., pp. 413, 414; WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, pp. 408 et seq., post) and the Lee Conservancy Board (see title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, p. 406, post) appoint one each (Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7. c. 41), s. 1). For further provisions as to the election of these members, see ibid., Sched. III. The total number of members so elected is sixty-six. The representation may be varied should circumstances require by an order of the Local Government Board (ibid., s. 26).

having power to acquire land for the purposes of its duties without licence in mortmain (p).

606. At the date of the transfer to the Board of the undertakings of the companies there were also transferred all other debts, liabilities and obligations of each company then existing (q), and existing contracts made with any of the water companies were made binding on the Board (r).

607. The companies whose undertakings were transferred to the Metropolitan Water Board had received their powers under charters, special Acts and orders (s), and they were also subject to certain Acts applicable to them generally (t). The Board, subject to the provisions of the Metropolitan Water Act, 1902 (u), and amending Acts (b), holds the undertaking of each of the water companies, and may exercise all the rights, powers, authorities and privileges of the company, and is subject to all the duties, obligations and liabilities of the company under the Acts, whether local or general, and the charters, orders and other provisions relating to the company, in like manner, mutatis mutandis, as if the Board was the company (c).

(p) Metropolitan Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 1, and Sched. III. The appointment of a member to either of the offices of chairman or vice-chairman does not create a vacancy on the board (ibid.).

(s) The New River Company was incorporated by Letters Patent, dated 21st June, 1619 (17 Jac. 1). The companies had their own special Acts dating back to the eighteenth century, the later of which incorporated some of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), the effect of which was to extend its provisions to the whole undertaking; see, for example, Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Co. (1904), 20 T. L. R. 687, 11 L. L.; Chelsea Waterworks Co. v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1904] 2 K. B. 77, C. A.; Kent Waterworks (Company of Proprietors) v. Lamplough, [1904] A. The Metropolitan Water Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 56), s. 3, extended the provisions of the Metropolitan Water Acts, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84) and 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), to the whole area within which any of the companies was for the time being authorised to supply water. The companies were also subject to the Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 21), as to which see pp. 320, 321, ante, which Act now applies to the Board. SECT. 1.

The Metropolitan Water Board.

Transfer of charges.

608. Debts, debenture stock, rentcharges or other annual payments secured on the undertaking or income of any company or part thereof are secured in like manner on the water fund established by the Act (d), and if any of the same were charged on specific property they remain so charged (e). The irredeemable debenture stock was subsequently extinguished and water stock was issued in substitution thereof, such water stock not being redeemable until after sixty years from the 31st March, 1903 (f). The Board must, within one hundred years from that date, purchase or redeem and pay off all redeemable debenture stock and all mortgage debts, and any stock so purchased or redeemed must be cancelled as from the date of the purchase or redemption (g).

609. Provision was also made for the transfer of the officers and servants of the companies to the Board, and for compensation being made to those whose office was abolished (h). The Superannuation (Metropolis) Act, 1866 (i), applies to the Board as if the Board was an authority mentioned in that Act (j).

Transfer of staff.

610. For the purposes of its duties with respect to water supply, the Board has power (1) to manage, alter, enlarge and, with the consent of the Local Government Board, to alienate any land or buildings transferred to, or otherwise vested in it; (2) to acquire, hire, erect and furnish such buildings and offices as it may require, whether within or without the limits of supply, and for that purpose to acquire, purchase or take or hire or exchange land; but these powers do not authorise the Water Board to acquire any waterworks or wells, or to use any lands or any easements or any rights in or over lands acquired under the powers of this provision for the purpose of obtaining water for public supply (k); and (3) to promote or oppose any Bill in Parliament

General powers.

(1911), 27 T. L. R. 253, H. L.). These Acts and all public general Acts applying to the metropolitan water companies have been extended to parishes where any company was supplying water otherwise than in bulk without authority and to the works of the company therein (Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7. c. 41), s. 3). There is also a proviso providing that these Acts are not to apply to the Water Board as regards places which have ceased to be within the limits of supply (ibid.).

and prosecute or defend legal proceedings (l). Councils and other authorities represented on the Board are not thereby debarred from being heard against any Bill or provisional order promoted or applied for by the Board (m).

611. The Water Board must make to the Local Government Board an annual report of its proceedings, and must also give the Local Government Board such returns, statistics and information as to the exercise of these powers as the Local Government Board requires (n).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Finance.

Waterfund.

612. All receipts of the Water Board are carried to what is termed the water fund, and all payments by the Board must be made out of that fund. Any deficiency in the water fund, whether for satisfying past or future liabilities, in any financial year must be apportioned amongst the various cities, boroughs, municipal or metropolitan, and urban districts, the councils of which are for the time being entitled to be represented on the Board, in proportion to the rateable value appearing in the valuation lists in force on the preceding 6th April of the hereditaments at that date supplied with water by the Board in each such city, borough or district (o).

Borrowing
 powers.

613. The Board was given borrowing powers for the purpose of carrying out the transfer of the undertakings to be acquired by it, and of executing works authorised by the Acts of the various water companies, and, with the consent of the Local Government Board, for the purpose of any payment by the Board, or of any permanent work or other thing which the Board is authorised to execute or do, and which, or the cost of which, ought, in the opinion of the Local Government Board, to be spread over a term of years (p). Such money is raised by means of the issue of water stock (q), unless

The Board may obtain, and has obtained, statutory powers to acquire land for purposes of obtaining water and erecting waterworks; see Metropolitan Water Board (Various Powers) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxiv.); Metropolitan Water Board (New Works) Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. cxviii.).

(l) Metropolitan Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 24. The clerk of the Board, or any officer or member thereof acting under a general or special resolution of the board, may authorise the institution and carrying on, or the defence, of any proceeding which the Board are authorised to institute, carry on, or defend. Informations and complaints under the various Acts applicable to the Board, or under any bye-laws or regulations made thereunder, may be laid or made by an officer or member of the Board, or by the clerk (ibid., s. 24 (3)).

(m) Ibid., s. 31.

(n) Ibid., s. 28. The Local Government Board must lay the report annually before Parliament (ibid.).

(o) Ibid., s. 15 (1), (2). The Board must issue precepts for the apportioned sums to the councils of these various areas, and provision is made as to the rate out of which these sums are to be paid (ibid., s. 15 (3)—(5)). The Board has been authorised to issue precepts to the various authorities for a sum sufficient to meet the deficiency accumulated during the four years ending the 6th April, 1912 (Metropolitan Water Board Act, 1913 (3 & 4 Geo. 5, c. xcviii.), s. 81). For provisions as to payments out of the water fund, and for the appointment of a finance committee to regulate and control the expenditure, see Metropolitan Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 20.

(q) Such stock is called the Metropolitan Water Stock, and bears interest at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent. per annum. The stock and the interest the Local Government Board consents to some other mode of raising the money, in which case the money raised and the interest thereon are charged on the water fund, or on such property or revenues of the Board, in such manner as the Local Government Board sanctions (r).

SECT. 1.
The Metropolitan Water Board.

Money borrowed for the purpose of paying for the undertakings transferred, and of redeeming, purchasing, or paying off any debenture stock or mortgage debt, must be repaid within one hundred years from the 31st March, 1903, and if borrowed for any other purpose must be repaid within such period, not exceeding sixty years from the date of borrowing, as the Board, with the consent of the Local Government Board, determines (s).

Repayment of loans.

Borrowing powers for specific purposes have been conferred by subsequent special Acts (t), including power to raise money by the issue of bills (u) and power to borrow for current expenses by overdraft or temporary loan (w).

Specific purposes.

For the discharge of the various sums borrowed and of debenture stock mortgage debts, the Board must make provision by the creation of one or more sinking or redemption funds, in accordance with regulations which have been made by the Local Government Board (x).

Sinking funds.

614. The accounts of the Board, and of any committee appointed by it, and of its officers, must be made up and audited in like manner, and subject to the same provisions, as the accounts of county councils; a water consumer (a) has the same right as a ratepayer of being present at the audit, and of making objections and Payments, other than surplus revenue, into the sinking fund for redemption of loans etc. to be discharged within 100 years, were postponed for the first twenty years of the period (ibid.). The regulations were made by the Local Government Board by Order dated the 11th August, 1903. As to the sinking fund etc., see Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Co. (1904), 20 T. L. R. 687, H. (a) The expression "water consumer" means any person who is supplied with water by the Board, or who pays, or is liable to pay, any money charged by the Board for or in respect of the supply of water, whether under the name of rent, rate or otherwise (Metropolis Water Act, 1902, (2 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 37).

appealing, and the enactments relating to the accounts of county councils and the audit thereof and to all matters incidental thereto or consequential thereon, including the penal provisions, apply accordingly (b).

SECT. 2.—Sources of Water Supply.

Thames and Lee.

615. The Water Board obtains its supply of water from the rivers Thames and Lee and from their tributaries, and also from springs and wells in the land belonging to the Board (c). The rights to abstract water from the Thames and its tributaries were obtained from time to time by the various metropolitan water companies under agreements confirmed by local Acts, or directly under the provisions of local Acts. These agreements and provisions have since been consolidated and amended by a single Act (d). No water may be taken by the Board from the river Thames or its tributaries below the highest point where the tide flows (e).

New sources of supply.

616. Before the Water Board resorts to any new source of supply it must give notice in writing thereof to the Local Government Board, and within one month of the receipt of such notice the Local Government Board may, if it thinks fit, appoint a competent person as an inspector to report, with respect to any sources then specially authorised by Parliament, whether the directions of the special Act have been complied with in reference thereto, and, with respect to any new sources not specially authorised by Parliament, whether the same are capable of supplying good and wholesome water for domestic purposes (f).

(b) Metropolis Water Act, 1902 (2 Edw. 7, c. 41), s. 19. For the provisions as to the audit of the accounts of county councils, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., pp. 362, 363. The stamp duty for the purposes of the District Auditors Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 6), is settled by the Treasury, after consultation with the Local Government Board, and having regard to the cost of the audit (ibid., s. 19). The provisions of the Local Authorities (Expenses) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 72), were extended to the Board by the Metropolitan Water Board (Various Powers) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxiv.), s. 83.

(c) As to the effect on a stream of pumping from such a well, see English v. Metropolitan Water Board, [1907] 1 K. B. 588.

(d) Thames Conservancy Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. lvii.). This Act cancelled the agreements and repealed the enactments relating to the abstraction of the water from the Thames, and provided that the water so taken may be used for the supply of water to any part of the area. This Act also provided for the payment of an annual sum to the Thames Conservancy by the Water Board. Under the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxvii.), it is the duty of the Conservancy to maintain the flow and the purity of the river; see title WATERS AND WATERCOURSES, p. 448, post. As to the abstraction of water from the river Lee, see the River Lee Water Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. xcvi.); as to the powers of the Lee Conservancy Board, see Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75); Lee Conservancy Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. cxvii.). As to works to enable the water companies to supply each other with water in case of emergency, which powers and duties as to constructing works were transferred to the Board, see Metropolis Water Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 7).

(f) Metropolis Water Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84), s. 5. The Local

The Local Government Board must within twenty-one days after the receipt from the inspector of his report send to the Water Board, with respect to any such new sources of supply not specially authorised by Parliament, a certificate of approval or disapproval, and with respect to the sources specially authorised a notice in writing stating whether in the judgment of the Local Government Board the directions of the special Act in reference thereto have been complied with (g).

After receipt of a certificate of disapproval of a new source not specially authorised, the Board must not use such new source; and after receipt of a notice in writing that in respect of a specially authorised source the directions of the special Act have not been complied with, the Board must not use such source until it complies with such directions (h).

617. The London County Council has power from time to time to promote Bills in Parliament relating to the supply of water within the administrative county of London and to inquire as to possible sources of supply (i).

SECT. 3.—Water for Domestic Purposes.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Duty to Provide and Supply.

618. The Water Board may, and if required to do so must, provide and keep throughout its water limits, or throughout such parts thereof as the Board may be required, a constant supply of pure and wholesome water sufficient for the domestic purposes of the inhabitants within such limits, constantly laid on at such pressure as will make the water reach the top story of the highest houses within such water limits, but subject to any level prescribed by the special Act applicable, and must give and continue to give to such inhabitants such a constant supply (k). The Board is liable Government Board was substituted for the Board of Trade by the Public Health Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 79), s. 35; and see Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 343, Sched. V.; Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 142 (5). The inspector must give ten days' notice in writing of his intention to inspect the sources, and he has power of entry on the lands wherein such sources are situated (Metropolis Water Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84), s. 6).

The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), ss. 35, 36, are expressly excluded from incorporation in the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 3; but the other provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), with respect to the supply of water to be furnished by the undertakers, namely, ss. 37—43, are included; see pp. 304 et seq., ante. A constant supply is now afforded throughout almost the whole of the Board's limits of supply. On the 31st December, 1912, the percentage of supplies on the constant system was about 99·2; see Annual Report of the Local Govern-to penalties for non-compliance, but is not subject to any liability for not giving a constant supply if the want of such supply arises from frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable cause or accident (l).

619. The Board must cause service mains or pipes (not being communication pipes) to be laid down, and a supply of pure and wholesome water for domestic purposes to be brought to every part within the limits of supply whereunto the Board is required by so many owners or occupiers of houses or buildings or parts of houses or buildings occupied as separate tenements in that part of the limits, that the aggregate amount of water rate payable by them annually in respect of the supply so required is not less than one-tenth part of the expense of providing and laying down such mains or pipes. No such requisition is, however, binding on the Board unless such owners or occupiers severally execute an agreement binding themselves to take such supply of water for three successive years at least (m).

620. The Board must, at the request of the owner or occupier of any house or building, or part of a house or building occupied as a separate tenement, in any street within the limits of supply, in ment Board, 1913. Provisions under which the Board can be required to furnish a constant supply exist in the Metropolitan Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), ss. 8—13. The Board must on Sundays, as on other days, supply sufficient pure and wholesome water for the domestic use of the inhabitants within their water limits (ibid., s. 6). As to the prescribed level, see the saving in the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 22.

(l) Metropolitan Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 15; see the cases cited in note (c), p. 303, ante. If the Board violates, refuses, or neglects to comply with any of the above provisions, it is liable to a penalty not exceeding £200, and to a further penalty not exceeding £100 for every month during which such violation, refusal, or neglect to comply with the said provision continues after the Board has received notice in writing from the Local Government Board to discontinue the same (Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 16). As to the recovery and application of penalties, see ibid., ss. 44, 45. A private person cannot enforce the penalties under ibid., s. 16 (Kyffin v. East London Water Co., [1896] 1 Q. B. 446). As to neglect to supply by reason of drought, see Jackson v. Farnham Water Co. (1887), 3 T. L. R. 632.

(m) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 7. As to the penalties for neglect, see ibid., s. 12. The Board is not bound to furnish any supply of water or lay down any pipe for such purpose in any part of the limits of supply which is for the time being supplied with water by any company or by any body or authority other than the Board (ibid., s. 23). The provision in the text is substituted for and is similar in terms to the latter part of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 35; see p. 303, ante. The Board, on the application of any person supplied with water, must furnish him with the particulars of any pipe from which he is supplied, together with the names of the streets through which such pipe passes, and the commencement and termination thereof (Metropolis Water Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84), s. 18). As to plans of the Board's pipes, see ibid., s. 17, as amended by the Metropolitan Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 49. Purposes.

621. If for twenty-eight days after demand in writing made to the Board, and tender made of an agreement signed by the owners or occupiers to take and pay for a supply of water for domestic purposes for three years or more, the Board neglects to lay down service mains or pipes in the manner above mentioned, and to provide, by means of a communication pipe or pipes and other necessary and proper apparatus, to be provided and laid down and maintained by and at the cost of such owners and occupiers, such supply of water, the Board is liable, on summary conviction of any such neglect, to forfeit to each such owner and occupier by way of penalty the amount of rate which he would be liable to pay under such agreement, and also the further sum of 40s. for every day during which the Board neglects to lay down such mains or pipes, or to provide such supply of water (n).

supply.

622. Communication pipes and other necessary apparatus must be laid by the owners and occupiers of the dwelling-houses to be supplied with water, and for this purpose the provisions in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (p), in relation thereto apply (a). The owners or occupiers must also keep such pipes in repair (b), and for the purpose of repairing these pipes the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (c), as to opening the

This is subject to a proviso that the Board is not to be liable to any penalty for not laying down any such main or pipe, if it is prevented from doing so by any unavoidable cause or accident, or for not supplying water, if the failure to furnish such supply arises from frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable cause or accident (ibid.). There is also a provision in the Metropolitan Water Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84), s. 24, providing that no communication pipes or other means or contrivance are to be made, or laid down, without giving the notices and except under the superintendence mentioned in those provisions.  Purposes.

 "domestic

ground (d) are made applicable (e). This duty on the part of the owner and occupier to repair such pipes and apparatus extends to pipes and apparatus laid down before and existing when the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (f), came into operation, as well as to those laid down subsequently (g).

623. The expression "domestic purposes" includes water-closets and baths constructed or fitted so as not to be capable of containing when filled, or filled up to the overflow or waste pipe, if any, more than eighty gallons, but not baths capable of containing more than that amount. It does not include a supply of water for consumption by or washing of horses or cattle, for washing carriages or vehicles, for watering gardens by means of any outside tap or any hose, tube, pipe, sprinkler, or other like apparatus, or for fountains, or any ornamental purpose; nor does it include a supply of water for steam, gas, motor, and other like engines for railway purposes, ventilating purposes, for washing any machine or apparatus, for cleansing sewers and drains, for cleansing and watering streets or roads, for fire extinction, for flushing drains by means of any apparatus discharging automatically, for public baths or wash-houses, or for any trade, manufacture, or business (h). Water supplied to a factory for the use therein of the employees, and not for the purpose of manufacture or business (i), or water used by a refreshment caterer (k), is water supplied for domestic purposes.

 measure.

624. The Board is not bound to afford a supply of water otherwise than by measure to any house or building whereof any part is used for any trade or manufacturing purpose for which water is used, or to any common lodging-house, barracks, workhouse, or other public institution or building, except any hospital or sanatorium wholly or partly supported by endowments or voluntary contributions, and not carried on for purposes of private gain or loss. Where the Board declines to afford a supply otherwise than by measure it must, if required by the person who would otherwise have been entitled to demand such supply, furnish to the building in respect of which the supply is required a sufficient supply of water by measure (l).

In case of stopcocks in such pipes being out of repair, and persons tripping over them, the Board is therefore not liable for damages for negligence (ibid.). Metropolitan Water Board*, supra, per Lord LORENBURN, L.C., at p. 29. As to domestic purposes generally, see p. 301, ante.

SECT. 3.
Water for Domestic Purposes.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Purity and Sufficiency of Water.

625. There are many provisions in the Acts applicable to the Metropolitan Water Board (a) for the purpose of securing to the consumers a pure and sufficient supply of water for domestic purposes, and for affording to the inhabitants within the limits of supply remedies for default. There are provisions as to the filtration and conveyance of the water (b), and for its examination bacteriologically and otherwise. Complaints may also be entertained and inquired into by the Local Government Board and by the Railway and Canal Commission (c). There are also provisions in regard to the metropolitan gas supply for the protection of the water from contamination by gas (d).

Provisions for securing pure and sufficient supply.

626. The Local Government Board must from time to time examiners.

Water

(b) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi) s. 20. The Board may also require (ibid.) that the sum to be paid for any such supply by measure shall not be less than the sum which would have been chargeable in respect of such supply had the supply been given under the provisions of the Act relating to domestic supply otherwise than by measure, and the charges therefor (see p. 346, post), except in the case of barracks or other buildings for the time being in the occupation of His Majesty, or of any department of His Majesty's Government for public purposes. As to the supply to warehouses and such like institutions generally, see p. 300, ante.

(a) As to these Acts, see p. 332, ante.

(b) Thus, all water supplied by the Board for domestic use must be effectually filtered before it is passed into the pipes for distribution, except water pumped from wells into a covered reservoir or aqueduct, without exposure to the atmosphere, and which must not be afterwards mixed with unfiltered water (Metropolis Water Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84), s. 4). Water may only be brought or conducted within the metropolis in pipes or covered aqueducts, unless the water be afterwards filtered before distribution (ibid., s. 3). Reservoirs within five miles of St. Paul's Cathedral must be roofed in or covered over, except reservoirs from which the water is to be efficiently filtered before it is passed into the pipes for distribution, or reservoirs the water from which is to be used for other than domestic purposes (ibid., s. 2). As to the penalties for non-compliance, see ibid., s. 16. Every steam-engine, furnace, or other work in which coals which produce smoke during combustion are consumed by the Board for the purpose of the waterworks must be constructed on the most effectual principle for consuming its own smoke (ibid., s. 14).

(c) As to the Local Government Board, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 103, 104; as to the Railway and Canal Commission, see title COURTS, Vol. IX., pp. 217 et seq.; RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 753 et seq.

appoint a water examiner, being a competent and impartial person, who must from time to time, in the manner directed by the Local Government Board, examine the water supplied, in order to ascertain whether it has been effectually filtered as required (e), and he must report the result to the Local Government Board, who must send a copy of every such report to the Water Board. The Water Board may be represented at any examination by some officer, who must not, however, interfere with the examination (f); the examiner must at all reasonable times have free access to the works of the Water Board for the purpose of inspecting them, and must have all proper facilities for making an inspection (g).

examination.

627. The Water Board must cause chemical and bacteriological examinations of and experiments as to the condition of the water to be supplied by the Board to be made, and must supply such buildings, apparatus and plant, and such staff, and construct such works, as may be required for enabling such examinations and experiments to be conducted efficiently. The persons employed by the Board to make these examinations and experiments must periodically report to the Board the result thereof, and a copy of the report must at the same time be sent to the water examiner. The Board must also take and record such observations as may be required by the Local Government Board (h).

Complaint
to Local Government Board.

628. If at any time complaint as to the quantity or quality of the water supplied for domestic use is made to the Local Government Board, by memorial in writing signed by not less than twenty inhabitant householders paying rates for and supplied with water by the Water Board, the Local Government Board may, at any time within one month after the receipt of such complaint, appoint a competent person to inquire into and concerning the grounds thereof and report to the Local Government Board thereon (i). Even without such a complaint, the Local Government Board may at any time, if and when it thinks fit, appoint a competent person to inquire into and report on the quality of the water furnished by the Water Board (k). The person so appointed, in either case, must, within three days after such appointment, give notice thereof in writing to the Water Board, and after such notice, he has power to inspect and examine the waterworks and to inquire into the grounds of any complaint, and the Water Board must afford him all reasonable facilities for such inspection, examination, and inquiry (l). If after receipt of such report it appears to the Local Government Board that the complaint is well founded, or that some matter requires alteration, the Local Government Board must give notice thereof in writing to the Water Board (m), and the Water Board must within a reasonable time remove the grounds of complaint (n).

SECT. 3.
Water for Domestic Purposes.

629. Any water consumer (o), and any local authority (p), may complain to the Railway and Canal Commissioners (q) that the Water Board has failed to perform some statutory duty, and the Commissioners may hear and determine the complaint, and, if satisfied of such failure, order the Board to fulfil the duty within the time limited by the order and may, if they think fit, by any such order impose any penalty for such failure which can be imposed under any Act, and enforce any such order in like manner as any other order of the Commission (r). Similarly, a complaint may be made as to the quantity or quality of the water supplied, in which case the Commissioners may, if satisfied that the complaint is well founded, order the Board to remove the ground of complaint, and may award damages to the complainant (s).

Complaint
to Railway and Canal Commissioners.

630. A local authority may aid any water consumer in obtaining the determination of any question which appears to the local authority to be of interest to water consumers within its district with respect to the rights, duties, and liabilities of the Board in reference to the quantity or quality of the water supplied or the charges made. A local authority so aiding any legal proceedings may, if the court thinks fit, be made a party to the proceedings, and be liable for costs accordingly (t).

(o) A "water consumer" is any person supplied with water by the board, or who pays or is liable to pay any money charged by the Board for or in respect of the supply of water, whether under the name of rent, rate or otherwise, and includes any householder or owner or occupier of a house entitled to make a communication with the mains or pipes of the Board (Metropolis Water Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 56), s. 5); but the terms of agreements existing on the 6th August, 1897, between a water company and a water consumer as to the supply of water are not affected by this definition (ibid.).

(p) "Local authority" means the council of any county borough or district, the corporation of the City of London, and any metropolitan borough council (ibid.).

The remedies above mentioned are in addition to, and not in substitution for, any existing proceedings or remedy (ibid., s. 1 (4)).

631. The Water Board must, at the request of any owner or occupier of any premises situated in or adjoining any street in which any main or service pipe of the Board is laid, who requires for use on such premises a supply of water by measure for purposes other than domestic (u), and by means of communication pipes and other necessary and proper apparatus to be provided, laid, and maintained by and at the cost of the person requiring such supply, afford a supply of water by means of a meter or other fit and sufficient instrument or apparatus supplied (at the cost of such person as aforesaid) or approved by the Board (a) for measuring and ascertaining the quantity of water so supplied (b). The Board is not liable to any penalty or damages for not supplying water under this provision if the failure to furnish such supply arises from frost, unusual drought, or other unavoidable cause or accident (c). Any builder about to erect any building or part of a building who requires a supply of water for that purpose is deemed the occupier of premises within the meaning of the above provision (d).

Hydraulic
pressure.

632. The Board may also from time to time supply water under pressure for the purpose of supplying motive power by hydraulic pressure by agreement with the person requiring such supply (e).

agreement.

633. The Board has a general power of supplying water by agreement with any person or body desiring a supply for any purpose within the limits of supply, and may do so upon such terms and conditions as to payment and otherwise as may be agreed upon. The terms and conditions upon which such supply provision changes the law as laid down in A.-G. v. Camberwell Vestry (1894), 8 R. 627.

(u) As to what purposes are not domestic purposes, see pp. 301, 302, 340, ante.

(a) A scale of maximum charges for the hire of meters supplied by the Board is provided in the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 18. The scale varies from 1s. 6d. to 25s. per quarter, according to the diameter of the inlet and outlet to such meter (ibid.).

(b) Ibid., s. 16 (1). As to the charges for such supply, see ibid., s. 16 (2), (3); pp. 347, 348, post. As to the rights of builders previously to this Act, see Metropolitan Water Board v. Paine, [1907] 1 K. B. 285.

(d) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 17. The Board may, however, if it so determines, instead of affording the required supply by measure, afford the same at a rate not exceeding 7s. per £100 of the probable total cost after making such allowance as the Board may think reasonable for decorative or iron or steel work not requiring the use of water (ibid.). A builder may, however, obtain the water from a building owner who is paying for it by measure, and in this case he is not liable to pay the Board as a person who has required a supply of water from the Board (Metropolitan Water Board v. Johnson & Co., [1913] 3 K. B. 900, C. A.). The determination as to charging by rate must be a determination in the particular case; a general resolution by the Board to charge by rate is not sufficient (ibid.).

(e) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 21. The rates and charges and terms and conditions of such supply must from time to time be agreed upon (ibid.).

is given must be the same, in like circumstances, to all consumers (f). Notwithstanding any of these provisions or any agreement, the Board is not required to afford a supply of water for other than domestic purposes, if and so long as any such supply would interfere with the sufficiency of the water required to be supplied for domestic purposes (g).

SECT. 4.
Water for Non-domestic Purposes.

SECT. 5.—Water for Public Purposes.

634. The Water Board is subject to the same duties in regard to supplying water for cleansing of drains, watering streets, and for public baths and washhouses as are other undertakers under the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (h), with certain modifications (i). The rate for such supply is 6*d.* per 1,000 gallons (k). Cleansing of streets etc.

635. As regards fire extinction the Board is subject, with certain modifications, to the same duties as other undertakers (l), the London County Council being the local authority in respect of the enforcement of these duties (m). The Board, at the expense of the London County Council, must provide in any mains or pipes within the Metropolis, plugs, hydrants, and all other apparatus necessary or proper in connexion with the Board's pipes, for a supply of water in case of fire, and the London Fire Brigade may make such use thereof as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of extinguishing any fire (n). These plugs, hydrants, and other Fire extinction.

(f) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 24. Nothing in this provision prejudices or affects the terms upon which any person or body is entitled to require a supply for any purpose (ibid.).

(i) Thus, the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 37, is to be construed as extending to all such purposes as are therein mentioned, whether the expenses in connexion with such purposes are defrayed out of the poor rates, borough rates, or out of any other public rates (Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 31). apparatus may be used by the Board for other than public purposes, without the consent of the London County Council, and may, by permission of the Board, be used by other persons (o).

SECT. 6.—Charges for Supply.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Water Rates.

Basis of rate.

636. The rate per annum for a domestic supply must not exceed 5 per cent. of the rateable value of the house or building or part of a house or building in respect of which the supply is required, and such rate, subject to the provisions herein stated, must be charged uniformly in like circumstances to all consumers entitled to such supply (p).

Rebates.

Where the Water Board furnishes a supply of water for domestic purposes to any house or building or part of a house or building occupied solely for the purposes of any trade or business, or of any profession or calling, by which the occupier seeks a livelihood or profit, and occupied as a separate tenement, which is assessed to the poor rate, or other rate in which such last-mentioned rate is included, in a sum exceeding £300 per annum, and is not charged with the payment of inhabited house duty, the Board must make and allow from the water rate payable in respect of such supply a rebate or discount of such amount, not less than 20 per cent. nor more than 30 per cent. of such water rate, as the Board from time to time determines, and such rebate or discount must from time to time be made or allowed from the water rate payable in respect of every such supply, and at a uniform rate per cent. (q).

notice thereof to the London County Council, and if the Council does not within two months specify the size and position of the plugs which it requires to be fixed, the Board may provide such plugs as to the Board seem necessary and proper, and these plugs are deemed to be a compliance with the requirements as to supplying such plugs, and the costs of providing such plugs are at the expense of the Council (Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 34).

(p) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 8; as to an exception from this uniform rate in respect of an estate in Paddington, see ibid., s. 11. The Board cannot charge any additional rate for a supply constituting a high service (ibid., s. 22). A house may be occupied as a separate tenement and the rate chargeable on it only, although it communicates with adjoining buildings (Metropolitan Water Board v. Baker (G. P. & J.), ltd. (1910), 74 J. P. 337).

(q) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 9. In making and allowing such rebate or discount the water rate must not in any case be less than would have been payable in respect of any house or building or part of a house or building occupied as a separate tenement assessed to the poor rate or other such rates in a sum of £300 per annum (ibid.). In order to ascertain whether any such house or building or part thereof is charged with the payment of inhabited house duty, any person having charge of any list of assessments to or exemptions from such duty, or any official document relating thereto, must on a request in writing by the clerk of the Board make and transmit to the Board copies or extracts from the same certified as correct by the officer preparing the same, or permit the Board to make copies or extracts. Any such certified copy or extract is in all proceedings and for all purposes

637. The rateable value of any house or building or part of a house or building for the purposes of water rate must be determined by the valuation list in force at the commencement of the quarter for which the water rate accrues (r), or, if there is no such list in force, by the last rate made for the relief of the poor or other rate in which such last-mentioned rate is included (s). If no rateable value has been assigned in any such valuation list to any house or building or part of a house or building, and such house or building or part is not rated to any rate made for the relief of the poor or to any such rate as aforesaid, the rateable value must for the purposes of the water rate be determined by two justices (t).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Supply by Meter.

638. A maximum scale of charges for supply by meter is provided, and the charge per 1,000 gallons varies with the amount consumed, but there is also a minimum quarterly charge (a). The whole of the water furnished to any person within any premises which form one area for trading or manufacturing purposes must be reckoned as one supply, and is chargeable accordingly, notwithstanding that the water may be in fact delivered thereat through two or more meters, pipes or other necessary and proper admissible as sufficient evidence of the matters thereon stated (Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 10).

(r) It is immaterial that a provisional list altering the value may come into force a few days later (Metropolitan Water Board v. Phillips, [1913] A. C. 86). As to the valuation lists in the Metropolis, see title RATES AND RATING, Vol. XXIV., pp. 115 et seq.

(s) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 13 (1). As to the rateable value of buildings in occupation of His Majesty or of the Government, see ibid., s. 14.

(t) Ibid., s. 13, which provides that the annual value of such house, building, or part is to be determined in the manner provided by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 68 (as to which see p. 314. ante), and that such annual value shall be the rateable value (Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 13 (1)). By the Water Rate Definition Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 34), s. 1, it was provided that in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 68, the words "the annual value of the tenement supplied with water" are, within the unions and parishes to which the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), applies, to mean the rateable value as settled from time to time by the local authority as duly constituted, provided that where the water rate is chargeable on the annual value of a part only of any hereditament entered in the valuation list such annual value is to be a fairly apportioned part of the rateable value of the whole tenement ascertained as aforesaid, the apportionment in case of dispute to be determined by two justices as provided by the said provision. By the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 13 (2), the Water Rate Definition Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 34), is extended and made applicable throughout the whole limits of supply, and in construing the above proviso to ibid., s. 1, the words "rateable value" are to be substituted for "annual value."

(a) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 16 (2). Thus, the charge per 1,000 gallons is 11d. where the quarterly consumption does not exceed 50,000 gallons, and is 6½d. when such consumption exceeds 50,000 gallons. The minimum charge is 22s. 11d. per quarter. As to supply for hydraulic purposes, see p. 344. ante.

SECT. 6. instruments (b). The rates are to be charged uniformly under like circumstances to all consumers entitled to and receiving a supply (c).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Payment and Recovery of Rates.

Application of Waterworks
Clauses Act,
1847.

639. The provisions in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (d), with respect to the payment and recovery of water rates (e) apply to the Water Board with some modifications (f), and the several words and expressions defined in that Act have the same meanings, unless there is something in the subject or context repugnant to such construction (g). Further, where a house or building or part of a house or building supplied with water is let to monthly or weekly tenants, or tenants holding for any other period less than a quarter of a year, the owner instead of the occupier must, if the Board so determines, pay the rate for the supply (h).

(b) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.). There is also a similar proviso as to water taken for railway purposes (ibid.).

(c) Ibid., s. 16 (3). The Board must not in the case of any supply exceeding 25,000 gallons charge for any such supply a greater sum than it would be entitled to charge if the quantity of water supplied were just sufficient to bring such supply within the next division of the scale of rates relating to a supply of a greater quantity whereon a lower rate for every 1,000 gallons is chargeable (ibid.); as to supply by agreement, see ibid., s. 24; p. 344, ante.

(d) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17.

(e) Ibid., ss. 68–74; see pp. 314 et seq., ante.

(f) As to a modification of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 68, see note (a), p. 315, ante. The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 70 (see p. 316, ante), which provides for the rates being paid quarterly on the usual quarter days, is varied by making the quarterly days for payment the 1st day of April, July, October, and January respectively (Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 15). The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 71 (see p. 317, ante), which relates to notice of discontinuance of supply, is varied by a provision that the notice for a discontinuance of a supply of water is of no effect unless it is in writing, signed by and on behalf of the consumer, and is left at or sent by post to the office of the Board (Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 30). The Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 72 (see note (e), p. 316, ante), which makes the owners of tenements of the annual value of £10 and less liable for the water rates, is varied by the alteration of the words “annual value” to “rateable value” and inserting £20 for £10 (Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. c. clxxi.), s. 4). The effect of this amendment is to make the Water Rate Definition Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 34), apply also to the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 72 (Metropolitan Water Board v. Streeton (1910), 102 L. T. 220). The definition of “owner” in the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 72, is the definition adopted throughout the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.); see ibid., s. 5; Metropolitan Water Board v. Brooks, [1911] 1 K. B. 289, C. A.

(g) Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 3.

(h) Ibid., s. 26. The provisions in the Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 21), prohibiting the cutting off of the water supply for non-payment of such rates (see p. 320, ante) apply to the Water Board; see note (t), p. 332, ante.

the owner and not by the occupier or occupiers, and such owner agrees with the Board in writing to pay such rate whether the house, building, or part be occupied or not, the Board may make or allow to such owner a deduction or abatement from the amount payable by way of water rate in respect of such house, building, or part to an amount not exceeding one-fifth thereof, and in agreeing to make or allow any such deduction or abatement the Board may impose such terms and conditions as to the time and mode of payment of the water rate as it may think fit (i).

SECT. 6.
Charges for Supply.

Disputes in regard to the charges for supply to Government buildings may be settled by arbitration (k).

641. If any person refuses or neglects to pay to the Board any rate or sum due in respect of the charges for water supply, the Board may recover the same with costs in any court of competent jurisdiction; this remedy is in addition to the other remedies of the Board for the recovery thereof (l).

Recovery by Action.

642. If a consumer leaves the premises where water is supplied to him without paying the rate, the Board cannot require the next tenant of the premises to pay the arrears, unless the incoming tenant has agreed with the defaulting consumer to do so. The Board, notwithstanding such arrears, must supply water to the incoming tenant when required by him (m).

change of tenancy.

SECT. 7.—Waste, Misuse, and Contamination.

643. Every cistern or other receptacle for water, and every closet, soil pan, and private bath, supplied with water by the Water Board, must be so constructed and used as effectually to prevent the waste, misuse, or undue consumption of water, and the flow or return of foul air or other noisome or impure matter into the mains of the Board, or into any pipes connected or communicating therewith. The Board is not bound to supply water into any cistern, receptacle, closet, soil pan or private bath not so constructed and used (n).

Bunn*, [1913] 3 K. B. 181, C. A., following Blackburn Corporation v. Sanderson, [1902] 1 K. B. 794, and distinguishing Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell (1876), 1 Ex. D. 514, C. such regulations as are necessary or expedient for the purpose of preventing the waste or misuse, undue consumption or contamination of water, and therein, amongst other things, to prescribe the size, nature and strength of the pipes, cocks, cisterns, and other apparatus to be used, and to interdict any arrangements and the use of any pipes, cocks, cisterns, or other apparatus, which may tend to such waste, misuse, undue consumption, or contamination (o). The Water Board, if it thinks fit, or, if requested by the Local Government Board, may repeal or alter any of these regulations, or make new regulations instead of any of them (p). Penalties may be imposed by such regulations for offences against the same, not exceeding in respect of any offence the sum of £5, and such penalties are recoverable before a court of summary jurisdiction; every such regulation must, however, be so framed as to allow part only of the maximum penalty being inflicted (q). The regulations, or any repeal or alteration thereof, are of no force or effect until submitted to and confirmed by the Local Government Board, which may institute an inquiry in relation thereto (r). Printed copies of the regulations in force for the time being are to be kept at the office of the Water Board, and of the London County Council, and of the different city, borough, and district councils within the limits of supply, and must be open to inspection without payment; and printed copies must be supplied by the Water Board on payment to persons applying for the same (s). All regulations, and every repeal or alteration, when so published, is binding upon and must be observed by all parties, and the Board is not bound under any agreement to supply water to premises unless such regulations as are for the time being in force are duly observed in respect of such premises (t).

(o) Metropolis Water Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84), s. 26; Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 17. Regulations pursuant to these enactments were made and approved by the Board of Trade by Order dated the 16th August, 1872. These regulations are not affected by the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. clxxi.), s. 35.

(p) Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 18. The Local Government Board was substituted for the Board of Trade by the Public Health Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 70); see pp. 336, 337, ante. A "metropolitan authority," or any ten consumers of the water supplied, may request the Water Board in writing to repeal and alter the regulations, or to make new regulations, and if the Water Board refuses, the Local Government Board after inquiry may make such repeal or alterations or new regulations as it thinks fit (Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 19). The expression "metropolitan authority" is defined (ibid., s. 3, Sched. A; London Government Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 14), s. 5 (2), Sched. II., Part II.) as including the London County Council, the City Council, the various metropolitan borough councils, and borough and district councils within the limits of supply. As to serving notice of alteration of the regulations on the metropolitan authority, see Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 21.

(t) Ibid., s. 24.

645. When the Board affords, or is about to afford, a constant supply of water (a) in any district, the owners and occupiers of premises supplied with water in the district must provide the fittings prescribed by the regulations, and from time to time keep them in proper repair (b). If the owner or occupier makes default in so providing the fittings, the Board may, if it thinks fit, provide them, and where the fittings of any person are out of order and not as prescribed, the Board may, by notice in writing to such person, require him within twenty-four hours after the date of the service of such notice to cause the same to be repaired, so as to prevent any waste of water, and if any person fails to comply with the terms of such notice, the Board may, if it thinks fit, repair the fittings. The expenses incurred by the Board in providing such fittings and in making such repairs are payable to the Board by the person liable to pay the rate for the water supplied, or on whose credit the water is supplied, by means of such fittings, or by the owner of the premises (c).

SECT. 7.
Waste,
Misuse, and Contamination.

Provision of fittings.

When the Board is required or has proposed to provide a constant supply in any district, the officers and agents of the Board, or of the party requiring such supply, or any person appointed by the Local Government Board for such purpose, may at all reasonable times enter any premises within such district in order to inspect the premises and examine the same with a view to ascertain whether there are in or about the same the prescribed fittings, or to provide or repair the fittings (d). Disputes as to entry.

(a) Provision is made for notices being served on owners and occupiers within any district, when it is proposed to give a constant supply therein, requiring them to supply their premises with the necessary fittings. Such fittings must be provided within two months of the service of the notice (Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), ss. 26—28).

(b) Ibid., ss. 3, 28. The term "fittings" includes communication pipes, and also pipes, cocks, cisterns, and other apparatus used or intended for supply of water by the Board to a consumer, and for that purpose placed in or about the premises of the consumer (ibid., s. 3); as to communication pipes and their repair, see pp. 339, 340, ante.

(c) Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 29. Such expenses may be recovered with costs from the owner, and to the extent of any rent due by the occupier of the premises from such occupier, before a court of summary jurisdiction, or by action in any court having jurisdiction locally in the matter, as if the same were an ordinary simple contract debt. Any sum and costs recovered from the occupier may be deducted from the rent due. If the occupier fails to disclose the amount of rent due by him, or the name and address of the owner, he is liable to pay the whole of such expenses and costs, but the above provision does not, as between owner and occupier, affect any contract made between them respecting the payment of any such works (ibid.). The term "owner" means the person who for the time being receives the rack-rent of the premises with reference to which the term is used, whether on his own account or under or by virtue of any mortgage or charge, or as agent or trustee for any person, or who would so receive the same if the premises were let at a rack-rent, and includes every successive owner from time to time of the premises, being such for any part of the time during which the enactment wherein that term is used operates in relation to the premises (ibid., s. 3; Metropolitan Water Board v. Brooks, [1911] 1 K. B. 289, C. A.).

(d) Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 30. Persons obstructing such inspection, examination, provision or repair of fittings whether the fittings of any person are as prescribed are settled by a court of summary jurisdiction on the application of either party (e).

646. When a constant supply is afforded or about to be afforded, any person supplied with water by the Board who wilfully or negligently causes or suffers any fittings to be out of repair, or to be so used or contrived that the water supplied is or is likely to be wasted, misused, unduly consumed or contaminated, or so as to occasion or allow the return of foul air or other noisome or impure matter into any pipe belonging to or connected with the pipes of the Board, is liable for every such offence to a penalty not exceeding £5 (f).

647. If any person supplied with water by the Board wrongfully does or causes or permits to be done anything in contravention of any of the provisions of the special Acts applicable to the Board or of the Metropolis Water Acts, 1852 (g) or 1871 (h), or wrongfully fails to do anything which under any of those provisions ought to be done for the prevention of the waste, misuse, undue consumption or contamination of the water of such company, the Board may, without prejudice to any other remedy against him, cut off any of the pipes by or through which water is supplied by them to him or for his use, and may cease to supply him with water so long as the cause of injury remains or is not remedied (i). Within twenty-four hours of such cutting off from a dwelling-house the Board must give notice thereof in writing to the sanitary authority of the district in which the house is situated (k).

648. The absence, in respect of any premises, of the prescribed are liable for each offence to a penalty not exceeding £5 (Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 30). This provision gives the officers of the Board a right of entry to inspect the fittings at any reasonable time where a constant supply is afforded, and is independent of the other provisions as to notice requiring fittings when the supply is about to be afforded (Metropolitan Water Board v. Northcott (1907), 71 J. P. 338). Proof of the regulations is, however, necessary in order to obtain a conviction for obstruction (ibid.).

(c) Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 31. The court may make such order as to the costs of the proceedings as seems just, and the decision of the court is final and binding on all parties (ibid.). As to courts of summary jurisdiction, see title MAGISTRATES, Vol. XIX., pp. 571 et seq.

(i) Metropolis Water Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 84), s. 25; Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 32. The right to cut off the supply for failure to pay water rate is subject to the provisions of the Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 21), as to which see Metropolitan Water Board v. Bibbey, [1911] 2 K. B. 74; pp. 320, 321, ante. Failure to repair a communication pipe which is leaking is a good ground for cutting off the supply (Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Rodocanachi, [1904] 2 K. B. 230; see pp. 322, 339, 340, ante).

(k) Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 32; Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 49. The penalty for failure is £10, which the sanitary authority must enforce (ibid.). As to the sanitary authority, see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., pp. 408, 466.

fittings after the prescribed time is a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily (l). In the Metropolis every sanitary authority must also make bye-laws for securing the cleanliness and freedom from pollution of tanks, cisterns, and other receptacles used for storing water used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes, or for manufacturing drink for the use of man (m).

(l) Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 33; see title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., pp. 539, 566. Such absence of water fittings is deemed to render the premises unfit for human habitation, unless and until the contrary is shown to the satisfaction of the court (Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 33; Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 4 (3) (d)). An occupied house within the Metropolis without a proper water supply is also a nuisance liable to be dealt with summarily, and if it is a dwelling-house is deemed unfit for human habitation (Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 48; and see p. 267, ante).

Part I.—Property in Water.

SECT. 1.

Extent of Rights of Property in Water.

Flowing water.

SECT. 1.—Extent of Rights of Property in Water.

649. Water flowing in a known channel or percolating through the soil is not, except in the cases mentioned below, the subject of property or capable of being granted to anybody. For flowing water is publici juris, not in the sense that it is bonum vacans, to which the first occupant can acquire an exclusive use, but in the sense that it is public and common to all who have a right of access thereto (a).

The exceptions to this rule are as follows:—(1) Where Parliament has declared otherwise (b); (2) where the water flows to a person's property and there is no one to share with him the use of the water, or to call him to account for any use he may make of it (c); (3) where flowing water is appropriated or taken into possession, but the right of property exists during such possession only (d); and (4) where water is supplied by a water company, even though in the consumer's own pipes (e).

Water in receptacle.

650. Water which does not flow, but is in some receptacle, is the property of the person who has the possession of it so long as he continues such possession (f), and such water may be granted by him to another (g).

SECT. 2.—Grant of Property or Proprietary Rights in Water.

Scope of grant.

651. Except in the instances mentioned above (h) where a person may have a proprietary right in water, no one can make a grant of any property or proprietary right in flowing water so as to affect the rights of persons who have a right of access to such water (i).

(a) Embrey v. Owen (1851), 6 Exch. 353; Mason v. Hill (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 1; Ewart v. Belfast Poor-Law Guardians (1881), 9 L. R. Ir. 172, C. A. A person can only acquire a right to so much water as he applies to a beneficial purpose, leaving the rest to others who, if they appropriate it, cannot lawfully be disturbed (Williams v. Morland (1824), 4 Dow. & Ry (K. B.) 583).

(b) Medway River Navigation Co. v. Romney (Earl) (1861), 9 C. B. (N. S.) 575; Rochdale Canal Co. v. King (1840), 14 Q. B. 122.

(c) Holker v. Porritt (1875), L. R. 10 Exch. 59, Ex. Ch. As soon as a person has appropriated water to a beneficial use, he may sue for any injury done to him in respect of such use (Mason v. Hill, supra).

(d) Holker v. Porritt, supra; 1 Bl. Com. (1841 ed.) 149, 157. The same rule applies to percolating water when appropriated even by the artificial means of pumping (Ballard v. Tomlinson (1885), 29 Ch. D. 115, C. A.); see also title PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., p. 401.

(e) Ferens v. O'Brien (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 21, where it was held to be larceny at common law to take water from the pipes of another person.

(f) 2 Bl. Com. 2, 14; Ferens v. O'Brien, supra. If such water escapes the person who stored it is liable for the consequences (Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330); and see p. 430, post.

(g) By the grant of a pool or pit of water, the water passes (Co. Litt. 5; Throckmerton v. Tracy (1855), Plowden, 145, 151), stagnum being a word compounded of land and water and containing both.

(h) See the text, supra.

(i) By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict.

A person may, however, grant to another the right to take or use running water so as to bind the grantor's estate, or such rights may be acquired by uninterrupted user, because they are easements (j).

Part II.—Rights and Duties Relating to the Soil.

SECT. 1.—The High Seas.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

652. The term "high seas" includes the whole of the sea below low-water mark and outside the body of a county, for the realm of England only extends to the low-water mark, and all beyond is the high seas (k). Definition.

The soil under the part of the high seas which is more than three miles from the coast is, in the absence of any treaty between States or of actual possession by a State, the property of no person (l).

c. 41), s. 6, a conveyance of land is deemed to include waters and water-courses appertaining or reputed to appertain to the land, or demised or occupied or enjoyed with or reputed or known as part or parcel of, or appurtenant to, the land; see also Cunham v. Fisk (1831), 2 Cr. & J. 126. Running water passes with the land on a sale, but a riparian owner cannot, except as against himself, grant to any other person any right to take water; see Ormerod v. Todmorden Mill Co. (1883), 11 Q. B. D. 155, C. A.; and p. 427, post.

(j) Mason v. Hill (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 1; Fitch v. Rawling (1795), 2 Hy. Bl. 394; Manning v. Wasdale (1836), 5 Ad. & El. 758; Eace v. Ward (1855), 4 E. & B. 702. The privilege of washing and watering cattle at a pond, and of taking and using the water for culinary and domestic purposes, is not a profit à prendre, but an easement; compare title EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE, Vol. XI., pp. 238, 337; see also Lord v. City of Sydney Commissioners (1859), 12 Moo. P. C. C. 473 (reservation of right to water). Unless the user was by consent or agreement in writing, forty years' enjoyment confers an absolute and indefeasible right; see the Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2. Before this Act it was said in Bealey v. Shaw (1805), 6 East, 208, per Lord ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., at p. 215, that twenty years' exclusive enjoyment of water in any particular manner affords a conclusive presumption of right in the party enjoying it, derived from grant or Act of Parliament; but less enjoyment may suffice. A sale of water power derived from an artificial reservoir cannot be impeached by the vendor, though the sale might not be effectual as against riparian owners (Hamelin v. Bannerman, [1895] A. C. 237, P. C.).

(k) See Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 4 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 10); Selden, Mare Clausum, Book 2; R. v. Keyn (1876), 2 Ex. D. 63, C. C. R.; Coulson and Forbes, Law of Waters, 3rd ed., p. 1. It is doubtful whether the low-water mark is that of the ordinary tides or that of the spring tides. If the low-water mark of ordinary tides be the boundary, then on many parts of the coast there are considerable tracts of land left bare by the sea on three days in every lunar week which are not part of the realm of England and not subject to the common law. In the time of Elizabeth the land and the foreshore were considered to go to the low-water mark of spring tides; see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, p. 236. As to land under territorial waters, see p. 359, post. For the definition of "ordinary tides," see p. 361, post.

The High Seas.

Rights of the Crown.

Grants to subjects.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Territorial Waters.

653. The soil of the sea between the low-water mark and so far out to sea as is deemed by international law to be within the territorial sovereignty of the Crown (m) is claimed as the property of the Crown although outside the realm. The soil of the bed of all channels, creeks and navigable rivers, bays and estuaries, as far up the same as the tide flows, is primâ facie the property of the Crown (n). The Crown also claims to be entitled to the mines and minerals under the soil of the sea within these limits (n).

654. The Crown can grant, and in many cases has granted, the soil below the ordinary low-water mark to subjects, but such a grant is subject to the public rights of navigation and fishing and rights ancillary thereto existing over the locus of the grant (o).

A subject may, by usage and prescription, acquire a title to so much of the soil below low-water mark as he may reasonably possess, namely, a districtus maris, a place in the sea between certain points, or a particular part contiguous to the shore, or a port or creek or arm of the sea (p).

(m) Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 73), s. 7. Under this Act the Crown, though claiming jurisdiction to such a distance as is necessary for the defence and security of the kingdom, limits the jurisdiction of the Admiral to one marine league measured from low-water mark, commonly known as the three-mile limit. The area of water in which British subjects have the exclusive right of fishing is defined as to the English Channel by the Sea Fisheries Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 79), Schedule, art. 11, and as to the North Sea by the Sea Fisheries Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 22), Sched. I., art. 11.

(n) According to the judgment of Cockburn, C.J., in E. v. Keyn (1876), 2 Ex. D. 63, C. C. R., the soil of the sea outside the body of a county and within the three-mile limit was not primâ facie vested in the Crown, as was the case of the bed and foreshores within the county, and has never been so vested except in the case of the bed of the sea off the coast of Cornwall by the Cornwall Submarine Mines Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 109). On the other hand, there are dicta of judges to the contrary in Gammell v. Woods and Forest Commissioners (1859), 3 Macq. 419, H. L.; Gann v. Whitstable Free Fishers (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 192; A.-G. v. Chambers (1854), 4 De G. M. & G. 206, 213; Lord Advocate v. Wemyss, [1900] A. C. 48, 66; FitzHardinge (Lord) v. Purcell, [1908] 2 Ch. 139, 166; Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Anson, [1911] 1 K. B. 171, C. A.; see also Crown Lands Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 62), s. 7; title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 112 et seq., 142 et seq.; p. 363, post. In A.-G. for British Columbia v. A.-G. for Canada, [1914] A. C. 153, P. C., the Privy Council refused to consider this question on the ground that it was not a question belonging to municipal law alone, and that it was not at present desirable that any municipal tribunal should pronounce upon it. For the history of the primâ facie title of the Crown to the bed of the sea and foreshores, see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, pp. 1 et seq.

By grants made before Magna Charta the public right of fishing may have been annulled; see title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., p. 674; FitzHardinge (Lord) v. Purcell, supra; A.-G. for British Columbia v. A.-G. for Canada, supra, at pp. 170, 171; and note (h), p. 361, post.

SECT. 2.—The Seashore.

SECT. 2.

SUB-SECT. 1.—*Limits.*The Seashore.

Definition.

655. The seashore or foreshore (for in legal parlance these expressions mean one and the same thing (q)) is that portion of the realm of England which lies between the high-water mark of the ordinary tides and low-water mark (r).

656. The high-water mark of the ordinary tides is the line of the medium tide between the spring and the neap tides throughout the year, that is, the point on the shore which is, about four days in every week, reached and covered with the tides. This line is, therefore, the landward limit of the foreshore (s).

High-water
mark.

657. The seaward limit is usually taken to be the low-water line of such tides (t). Foreshore is a movable freehold, varying as the water gradually and imperceptibly recedes or encroaches. Thus, a grant of foreshore conveys not that which at the time of the grant

Low-water
mark.

4 H. L. 266; and the cases cited in Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 5 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, pp. 20—22); see also note (h), infra.

(q) Mellor v. Walmesley, [1905] 2 Ch. 164, C. A.; but see Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 53), s. 82, in which the expression "the seashore" appears to be used as including the foreshore and seashore above high-water mark. There is no definition of seashore in this Act, but ibid., s. 82, appears to be a public enactment of a clause which has constantly been inserted in local Acts for town improvements, in which Acts the seashore was defined according to the desire of the promoters; see, for example, Clacton Improvement Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. liv.); Whitby Urban District Council Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. cxxxv.); Formby Urban District Council Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. cli.).

(r) Scrutton v. Brown (1825), 4 B. & C. 485, 496; A.-G. v. Chambers (1854), 4 De G. M. & G. 206, 216; Blundell v. Catterall (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 268.

(s) A.-G. v. Chambers, supra, per ALDERSON, B., on behalf of the judges who were called in to advise the court as to the landward limit of the Crown's title to foreshore, at p. 216: "The medium tides of each quarter of the tidal period afford a criterion which we think may be best adopted. It is true of the limit of the shore reached by these tides that it is more frequently reached and covered by the tide than left uncovered by it. For about three days it is exceeded and for about three days it is left short, and on one day it is reached. This point of the shore, therefore, is about four days in every week, i.e., for the most part of the year, reached and covered by the tides . . . We therefore beg to advise your lordship that in our opinion the average of these medium tides in each quarter of a lunar revolution during the year gives the limits of the Crown right to the seashore." This Lord CRANWORTH, L.C. (ibid., at p. 218), interpreted as meaning that the limit of the foreshore was "the line of the medium high tide between the springs and the neaps. All land below that line is more often than not covered at high water, and so may justly be said, in the language of Lord HALE, to be covered by the ordinary flux of the sea. This cannot be said of any land above that line"; compare Elliot v. Morley (Earl) (1907), 51 Sol. Jo. 625.

(t) Blundell v. Catterall, supra. The delimitation of the low-water boundary of the foreshore has not been brought directly in issue by the Crown, as was the case with the landward boundary in A.-G. v. Chambers, supra. It is not improbable that in former times the foreshore was considered to extend to the low-water mark of spring tides, for in manors to which a several fishery by fixed engines was parcel the fishing engines were not infrequently placed below the low-water mark of ordinary tides; see Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 5 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, pp. 21—26), quoting Magna Charta and various statutes for the removal of weirs, as is between high and low water mark, but that which from time to time is between these termini (a).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Accretion.

Where tide
recedes.

658. Where tidal water recedes gradually and imperceptibly from the land, or land by alluvion or dereliction is added to the dry land or foreshore, so that it becomes situate above the high-water mark of ordinary tides, or above the low-water mark, it belongs, if above the high-water mark, to the owner of the dry land to which it is added, and if above the low-water mark to the owner of the foreshore (b).

Where tide
encroaches.

659. Where the opposite process takes place, and the tidal water gradually and imperceptibly encroaches, the land which was situate above the high-water mark becomes the property of the owner of the foreshore, and where the land had been part of the foreshore its ownership passes to the owner of the bed of the tidal water (c). By "imperceptible" is meant imperceptible in its progress, not imperceptible after a length of time (d); for the whole doctrine of accretion is based upon the theory that from day to day, week to week, and month to month, a man cannot see where his old line of boundary was (e), and that which cannot be perceived in its progress is taken to be as if it never had existed at all (f).

Sudden changes.

660. Where, however, the change is not slow and imperceptible, but sudden (g), or where the boundaries of the land are well known and defined, the principles of law above stated do not apply, and no change occurs in the ownership of the land or foreshore (h).

In disputes between riparian owners and the Crown as to accretions, the burden of proving the former position of the high-water mark is on the Crown if the riparian owner admits the Crown's title to the foreshore (A.-G. v. Chamberlaine (1858), 4 K. & J. 292; A.-G. v. McCarthy, [1911] 2 I. R. 260).

If land suddenly inundated again becomes dry land, it again belongs to its former owner (A.-G. v. Reeve (1885), 1 T. L. R. 675 (10—12 feet of shingle added in a tide)). Lands acquired per relictionem maris (a sudden retreat of the sea) are not prescribable as part of a manor or as belonging to a subject (Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 6 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 30), citing R. v. Oldsworth (1637), in Exch.). For the effect of sudden changes on the ownership of fisheries, see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Fisheries, pp. 124, 135.

(h) Hindson v. Ashby, supra (where the land to which the accretion was added was a natural bank of a river 6 feet high). It is impossible to say with any certainty what is a sufficient boundary to prevent the doctrine of accretion applying. In Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 4 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 15), it is said: "If a subject hath land adjoining the sea, and the violence of the sea swallow it up, but so that yet there be reasonable marks to continue the notice of it; or though the marks be defaced; yet if by

The doctrine of accretion applies equally to the property of the Crown or a subject (i), and applies whether the change is caused by natural means or artificial means lawfully employed, because the rule applies to the result and not to the manner of its production (k).

SECT. 2.
The Seashore.

Extent of doctrine of accretion.
Effect of
accretion.

661. Where land imperceptibly accretes to land it acquires the legal characteristics of the land to which it is added. Thus, if it accretes to freehold it becomes freehold, or if to copyhold it becomes copyhold, and if to land subject to customary rights, it is equally liable to them (l). The same doctrine applies to the question of jurisdiction; thus, where a town is declared to be bounded by the high-water mark, the town will extend to that mark wherever it may happen to be from time to time (m).

662. The rights of the public over the foreshore, of fishing and navigation, are affected by accretion or dereliction to this extent, that they follow the foreshore wherever it may be from time to time (n).

Effect on public rights.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Ownership of the Foreshore.

(i.) The Crown.

663. De jure communi the Crown is primâ facie entitled to every part of the foreshore of this realm between the ordinary high-water mark and the low-water mark (o).

Primâ facie

situation and extent of quantity, and bounding upon the firm land, the same can be known, though the sea leave this land again, or if it be by art or industry regained, the subject doth not lose his propriety though the inundation continue forty years. If the mark remain or continue or extent can reasonably be certain, the case is clear"; see Anon. (1573), Dyer, 326 b; Anon. (1348), 22 Lib. Ass., pl. 93; but see Hindson v. Ashby, [1896] 2 Ch. 1, C. A., where LINDLEY, L.J., at p. 13, said that the doctrine would not apply "if the boundary on the waterside is a wall or something so clear and visible that it is easy to see whether the accretions, as they become perceptible, are on one side of the boundary or on the other," and that he was not satisfied that the statements in Bracton, Sciden Society ed., p. 105, Fleta 3, ch. ii., p. 176, 22 Ass., fol. 106, pl. 93, and Hale, de Jure Maris, cc. 1, 6, showing that the doctrine did not apply where the boundaries are well defined and known, were applicable to cases of land having no boundary on the side of the flowing water, except the water itself. In A.-G. v. M'Carthy, [1911] 2 I. R. 260, the doctrine was held to apply even though there was evidence by which the former line of high-water mark could be ascertained, namely, maps and plans. In Foster v. Wright (1878), 4 C. P. D. 438, changes in the course of a river marked from time to time on a map were held not sufficient to prevent the doctrine of accretion applying; see also Lloyd v. Ingram (1868), cited in Hindson v. Ashby, supra, at p. 20; Hayes v. Hayes (1897), 31 I. L. T. (Journal) 392.

SECT. 2.

The Seashore.Duchy of Lancaster.

664. Though the Crown may have granted out foreshore to a subject, it may have again become entitled to it by succession, escheat, or forfeiture, or purchase. In the case of the foreshores abutting on the lands of the Duchy of Lancaster the Crown's title to such foreshore either is the primâ facie title, or rests on the grants made to the Dukes of Lancaster before the possessions of that dukedom became part of the possessions of the Crown (p).

Duchy of Cornwall.

665. The primâ facie title no longer holds good in the case of foreshores on the coast of Cornwall, because, by a statute based on a charter of 11 Edw. 3, the rights of the Crown to the foreshores in this county have become vested in the Duke of Cornwall, except when they belong to a subject. The subject may prove his right to foreshore in this county in the same way as he can to foreshore which primâ facie belongs to the Crown (q).

10 H. L. Cas. 593; Gann v. Whitstable Free Fishers (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 192; Le Strange v. Rowe (1866), 4 F. & F. 1048; Kirby d. Kallgrew v. Gibs (1867), 2 Kob. 294; Constable's (Sir Henry) Case (1601), 5 Co. Rep. 106 a, 107 a. The primâ facie presumption of the Crown's ownership of the foreshore is based on the fundamental principle of the law of property in land, that all the lands in the realm belonged originally to the King (Hall on Seashore, p. 4). The presumption that the terra firma (i.e., land above the high-water mark) belongs to the King as never having been granted out can hardly arise, because there is overwhelming evidence that the greater part of such land has been granted out. Domesday Book itself is evidence of what lands belonged to the Crown, and what to its subjects; but, as the evidence that the Crown has granted the foreshore is not so comprehensive, the presumption still holds good, though of recent years it is of less weight than formerly. For fuller particulars of the origin and growth of this presumption, see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore. It is noteworthy that the Statute de Prerogativa Regis (17 Edw. 2, stat. 2, c. 13) is silent as to the Crown's ownership of the foreshore. In Le Strange v. Rowe (1866), 4 F. & F. 1048, ERLE, C.J., said, at p. 1052: "In a great number of cases the Crown has parted with the foreshore. There are some manors that remain in the Crown that are the property of the Crown, but I take it that in the great majority of cases the right to the foreshore between high and low water mark is in the Lord of the Manor"; see also Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 4 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 13): "Although it is true that such shore may and commonly is parcel of the manor adjacent, and so may be belonging to a subject as shall be shown, yet primâ facie it is the King's." The primâ facie presumption can scarcely apply to the lands of the lords marchers in Wales, who obtained their lands by grants of all lands which they might acquire by conquest (A.-G. v. Phillips (1857), cited in Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, pp. 511, 512). The management of the foreshore belonging to the Crown is, with certain exceptions, vested in the Board of Trade (Crown Lands Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 62), s. 7); the management of the mines and quarries in or under such foreshore is vested in the Commissioners of Woods and Forests (ibid., s. 21); see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 142 et seq. The Board of Trade's dealings with the foreshore are from time to time printed as a Parliamentary Paper. As to these dealings and the Board's dealings with the bed of the sea, see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, p. 597.

(p) There is no distinction between the privilege of the King as Duke of Lancaster and his prerogative as King of England (Alcock v. Cooke (1829), 5 Bing. 340); for some of these charters, see Hardy, Charters of the Duchy of Lancaster.

(q) Cornwall Submarine Mines Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 109), by s. 9 of which the rights of the subject are saved; see R. v. Keyn (1876), 2 Ex. D. 63, 121, 155, 158, 199, 202, C. C. R.; see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 113, 114. A translation of the charter of 11 Edw. 3 to Edward, Earl of Chester, is printed in The Prince's Case (1606), 8 Co.

666. In the County Palatine of Chester the prima facie title of the Crown is rebutted by Domesday Book, which states that in Cheshire the Bishop of Chester held of the King what pertained to his bishopric, and that all the rest of the land of the county Earl Hugh with his men held of the King (r). This palatinate is now vested in the Crown, and the title of the Crown to foreshore therefore rests upon the title of the Earls of Chester thereto.

667. In the County Palatine of Durham the prima facie title of the Crown is non-existent; for the foreshores there were granted to the Bishop of Durham as part of his palatinate (s). When such foreshores have not been granted by the bishops to their tenants they have been vested by Parliament in the Crown as part of the jura regalia of the bishopric, and are now under the control of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests (t).

Rep. 1a, 8a, 16a. The charter assigned seventeen manors to the Duchy and "also the profit of all the ports within the same our County of Cornwall to us belonging together with wreck of the Sea as well as of Whales and Sturgeon and other fish which do belong to us by reason of our prerogative and whatsoever belongs to any wreck of the sea with any appurtenances in our said County of Cornwall." This charter, as interpreted by the Cornwall Submarine Mines Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 109), was held in Penryn Corporation v. Holm (1877), 2 Ex. D. 328, to have passed the rights of the Crown in all the foreshores of the county of Cornwall to the Duchy, though in fact, at the time of this charter, the Crown had already parted with its right to wreck on parts of this coast (see Quo Warranto Rolls (Cornwall); Hale, de Jure Maris, cc. 6, 7 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, pp. 28, 41)), and probably all the foreshore (see note (d), p. 379, post). In Dickens v. Shaw (1822), cited in Hall on Seashore, Appendix, p. xlv., a grant of wreck was held not sufficient in itself to pass foreshore, though apparently in Penryn Corporation v. Holm, supra, such a grant was considered to be sufficient, for the charter of 11 Edw. 3 contains no direct grant of foreshore. Up to 1844 Duchy lands were inalienable; see Duchy of Cornwall Lands Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 65), s. 1; Lopez v. Andrew (1826), 3 Man. & Ry. (K. B.) 329, n.; A.-G. v. Geely (1660), Wight. 208. Charles II. was held entitled to the soil of Sutton Pool at Plymouth in right of the Duchy of Cornwall and not in right of the prima facie title (Hale, de Portibus, c. 4 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, pp. 56–58)).

By the Durham County Palatine Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 45), s. 2, the rents and proceeds of Durham foreshores, except at Holy Island, are divided between the Crown and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners; see also ibid., s. 4; Crown Lands Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 62), s. 7, Sched. the Crown to any part of the foreshore (1) by producing an express grant thereof from the Crown (b); or (2) by evidence from which such a grant may be inferred (c); or (3) by construction of a grant in ambiguous or general terms (d); or (4) by possession for a period of over 60 years (e); or (5) by proof that the foreshore has come into existence by a sudden incursion of tidal water (f). As against another subject, title can be made under the Real Property Limitation Acts (g).

foreshore.

669. Foreshore passes from the Crown by a grant which expressly refers to it by that name or has words which aptly describe it. In ancient grants the words Litus, Marina, Litus Maris, sometimes called Marettum, terra aqua maris cooperta (h), land within the flux and reflux of the sea (i), separalis piscaria, suffice to pass the foreshore. Less apt words, however, suffice to pass the foreshore from the Crown, if the grantee can show user under his grant; for when a question arises as to what passed by an ancient deed it can be explained by modern usage (j). Thus, the Crown may alienate

(b) Devonshire (Duke) v. Hodnett (1827), 1 Ilud. & B. 322. If the original grant is not forthcoming an exemplification or constat thereof may be used (Roscoe, Nisi Prius Evidence, 17th ed., p. 96); though at the present day a certified copy from the Public Record Office suffices; see title EVIDENCE, Vol. XIII., p. 524. Ancient grants of the Crown without evidence of possession are not enforced (A.-G. v. Richards (1795), 2 Anst. 603; Blount v. Layard (1888), [1891] 2 Ch. 681, n., C. A.; Johnston v. O'Neill, [1911] A. C. 552). Where there are several grants by the Crown of the same piece of foreshore the first grant prevails (Vyner v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board (1863), 14 C. B. (N. S.) 753).

(c) Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation v. Horner (1774), 1 Cowp. 102; Re Alston's Estate (1857), 28 L. T. (O. S.) 337. Where a grant cannot be produced evidence of ancient documents and modern acts of ownership unquestioned by the Crown are sufficient to sustain a title against the Crown (Re Alston's Estate, supra). Proof of the enjoyment of a several fishery by fixed engines raises the presumption that the foreshore belongs to the owner of the several fishery (A.-G. v. Emerson, [1891] A. C. 649; see also Foster v. Warblington Urban Council, supra); compare title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., p. 588.

foreshore by other words, if that is the apparent intention to be collected from the grant itself, or by the construction of an ancient grant by user. Where there is a doubt whether the grant includes the foreshore or not it is to be solved by reference to the user (k). Where the user has been long and notorious the proper course is to attribute such user to a legal origin and not to usurpation (l). In interpreting such grants, evidence of user before the time of the grant may also be given to explain what was granted (m).

or known as part or parcel of the same (g), or with waters, wastes, fisheries, wreck etc., or other general words if there has been sufficient evidence of possession under the grant (h). Foreshore may also pass by the grant of a town in fee farm (i).

672. When the grant is of wreck or of royal fish infra manerium (k) there is a great presumption that the foreshore is part of the manor, for wreck and royal fish are not taken above the high-water mark (l); but a grant of these privileges per se does not necessarily confer a title to the foreshore (m).

673. A grant of foreshore, just as in the case of other lands, carries the whole materials below it usque ad centrum (n); but it does not convey the right to a several fishery over it (o).

674. Every grant of foreshore, whether by the Crown or by a subject, is subject to the jus publicum, namely, the right of navigation and the right of fishery where such exists; and neither the Crown nor its grantee can use the foreshore so as to be a nuisance to the Crown's subjects (p); and a user, which at the time of the grant was lawful, becomes unlawful if it becomes by any circumstance a nuisance, unless it has been sanctioned by Parliament (q).

675. In proving possession to foreshore the owner thereof is only required to prove that he has had all the beneficial user of the foreshore which would naturally have been enjoyed by a direct grantee of the Crown. Foreshore in its natural state cannot be exclusively possessed, because the public cannot be excluded from exercising their rights belonging thereto, and moreover it is practically impossible to prevent occasional encroachment, because the cost of preventive measures will be altogether disproportionate to the value of the foreshore (r). No precise rule can be laid down as to the character and amount of possession necessary in order to prove a prescriptive right to foreshore; each case must depend upon its own circumstances, for the beneficial enjoyment of which the foreshore admits is an exceedingly variable quantity (s).

SECT. 2.
The Seashore.

676. In proving possession by acts done on the foreshore it is necessary that the acts were such that a lawful owner might do, and so done that those who were interested in disputing the ownership would be aware of them. Acts that tend to prove possession of a part of a tract of foreshore tend to prove ownership of the whole tract, if it is of such a common character as would raise a reasonable inference that possession of one part was possession of the whole (t). The weight of the aggregate of many acts of ownership taken together is very much greater than the sum of the weight of acts taken separately (a). The acts relied upon to prove possession must be done with the animus possidendi (b).

ownership.

Possession of foreshore can be proved by the same acts as are sufficient to prove possession to land above the high-water mark, and in particular by evidence of taking of sand, stones and seaweed, and licensing persons to do so; inclosing and embanking against the sea, and enjoyment of what is thus inclosed; erection of wharves, piers, groynes, and other works; taking of anchorage; and groundage dues; mining; taking of wreck and royal fish, and the enjoyment of a several fishery over the foreshore (c); shooting over the foreshore (d), and paying for the burial of dead bodies washed ashore or found thereon (e).

677. Acts done by the public on the foreshore are not the acts of the Crown upon which it can rely as evidence of possession by the Crown, though they may tend to derogate from the alleged possession of the person claiming a possessory title in the foreshore, and, if carried far enough, may deprive his possession of that exclusive character which is necessary in order to establish a prescriptive right (f).

Title by possession.

678. To establish a possessory title against the Crown sixty years' possession must be proved (g), but as between subjects twelve years' possession is sufficient (h).

C. 649 (letting of fishing places on shore by copy of court roll is evidence that the shore is within the manor). As to evidence of ownership of soil of fishery, see title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., pp. 586 et seq. The fact that cattle stray from a marsh on to the foreshore is not evidence of possession, though it is if they are put there (A.-G. v. Chambers, A.-G. v. Rees (1859), 4 De G. & J. 55; Lord Advocate v. Blantyre (Lord), supra).

(d) Fitzhardinge (Lord) v. Purcell, [1908] 2 Ch. 139; see pp. 373, 374, post.

(e) This is evidence of the right of the lord of the manor to wreck within his manor (Burial of Drowned Persons Acts, 1808 (48 Geo. 3, c. 75), s. 13, and 1886 (49 & 50 Vict. c. 20), s. 1). Burying the dead and looking after the living and securing the goods for the owners is a sufficient consideration for a custom to have the best anchor or chattel from a stranded ship (Simpson v. Bithwood (1691), 3 Lev. 307), but such a custom is bad unless there is an adequate consideration (Geere v. Burkensham (1682), 3 Lev. 85). Devonshire (Duke)* (1882), 8 App. Cas. 135; Johnston v. O'Neill, [1911] A. C. 552. Such acts do not necessarily lead to the inference that the owner of the foreshore has abandoned his right to the soil (Fitzpatrick v. Robinson (1828), 1 Hud. & B. 585).

(h) For note (h) see p. 371, post.

679. As against a trespasser it is not necessary for persons claiming foreshore to produce evidence of possession sufficient to displace the title of the Crown; and it is not open to the trespasser to give evidence of acts of ownership by the Crown, unless he can prove that they were done with the knowledge of the person claiming possession (i).

SECT. 2.
The Seashore.
Trespasser.

SUB-SECT. 4.—Islands.

680. Where an island arises in the sea or in tidal waters, it prima facie belongs to the Crown, unless the locus on which the island has been granted to or belongs to a subject, in which case the island is the property of the subject by reason of his grant or possession (j).

Islands in tidal waters.

681. Where an island arises in a river, whether tidal or non-tidal, to the soil of which the riparian owners are entitled usque ad medium filum aque, the property in the island is fixed by ascertaining where the medium filum aque would be irrespective of the island, and apportioning to the owner of the bed on each side of that line so much of the island as may lie between that line and his riparian land; for the ownership of an island follows the ownership of the soil before the island arose into existence (k).

Islands in rivers.

682. Where an island is caused by a sudden act of water in cutting off land or by a sudden recession of the water no change of ownership occurs. Where an island arises in a several fishery, the owner of which is owner of the bed, or in a river where one person owns the whole bed, the island belongs to the owner of the bed and not to the riparian owners (l).

Where no change in ownership.

683. When riparian owners are entitled to a part of an island, they should take possession and keep up their boundaries, otherwise they may lose their rights, because their ownership is affected by the position of the medium filum, for this is a movable line changing as the river gradually and imperceptibly changes its course and at the same time affecting the ownership of the bed and all that is on it.

Moore Stevens*, [1904] 1 Ch. 347, where it was held in the circumstances of that case that one riparian owner's land only extended to the medium filum of the channel between the island and his riparian land. In America no account is taken of the smaller of the two channels where an island lies more to one side of the river than another (Angell, Right of Property in Tide Waters, p. 42).

The Seashore.

Sand banks.
Acquisition of easements.

684. The same rules seem to apply to a sandbank in a river which uncovers at low water (m).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Easements.

685. Easements of all kinds may be acquired over the foreshore in exactly the same way as they may be acquired over any other land, provided that they do not interfere with public rights over the foreshore (n).

When the act relied on is an interference with the soil, such as the erecting of groynes to protect the adjoining land, it is a question whether such interference amounts only to an easement, or to an act of possession and ownership of the soil (o).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Rights over the Foreshore.

(i.) Navigation.

right.

686. All persons have a right to navigate over the foreshore, that is, to pass and repass in ships, including the rights attendant on the right of navigation, such as anchoring and mooring (p); but the right must be exercised reasonably and with due regard to the rights subservient to the right of navigation which the owner of the foreshore may have (q).

On the other hand, the owner of the foreshore must do nothing which interferes with the right of navigation (r).

(ii.) Passage.

Extent of
right.

687. The public has no right of passing along or across the foreshore (s), except in the exercise of the rights of navigation or (r) A.-G. v. Johnson (1819), 2 Wils. (Ch.) 87; R. v. Grosvenor (Lord) (1819), 2 Stark. 511. The owner can only justify a nuisance on the foreshore if it was created under statutory power or after a writ of ad quod damnum and inquest thereon, for, as the Crown has no right to use its title to the foreshore as a nuisance, or to place upon that soil what will be a nuisance to the Crown's subjects, so, too, the subject as the Crown's grantee cannot do so, as he takes subject to the restriction on the Crown (A.-G. v. Johnson, supra). The Crown has a right to abate a nuisance notwithstanding it be on the land of a subject (A.-G. v. Burridge (1822), 10 Price, 350; A.-G. v. Parmeter (1811), 10 Price, 378; A.-G. v. Terry (1874), 9 Ch. App. 423; A.-G. v. Tomline (1880), 14 Ch. D. 58, 59, C. A.). As to fisheries in relation to navigation, see title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., pp. 591, 592.

(s) The foreshore is not a street, highway, or public place within the meaning of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 3 (Maddock v. Wallasey Local Board (1886), 55 L. J. (Q. B.) 267; see title GAS, Vol. XV., p. 326, note (l)).

fishery, or in respect of a lawfully dedicated right of way from one place to another over the foreshore; there is no right of stray or of recreation there, and no right to go across the foreshore for the purpose of getting to or from boats, except by such places only as usage or necessity has appropriated for that purpose (t).

SECT. 2.
The Seashore.

There is no general right of loading or unloading, landing or embarking at pleasure upon any part of the seashore or land adjoining thereto except in case of peril or necessity (u).

688. By immemorial custom the inhabitants of a parish or the fishermen of a village may have acquired an easement over the foreshore or lands adjacent thereto (w). Though the public has no such right, the court is reluctant to assist by injunction the owner of the foreshore in restraining acts which in themselves cause no injury to him (x).

Rights of inhabitants.

689. Any person who is duly employed for the prevention of smuggling when on duty may pass over any part of the foreshore, and the officer in charge of any vessel or boat employed for the prevention of smuggling or acting in his aid may haul such vessel or boat upon the shore, except where it is a garden, pleasure ground, or place ordinarily used for bathing machines, and may moor such vessel or boat upon the foreshore for such time as he deems necessary and proper (y).

Prevention of smuggling.

(iii.) Shooting.

(1) In General.

690. The right to shoot and take birds on the foreshore is a profit à prendre, and can only be acquired in the same way and by the same class of persons as other profits à prendre are acquired (z).

Nature of right.

As the public is incapable of acquiring a profit à prendre, there is no general right to shoot over the foreshore, either when the tide is in or when it is out (a). The same rule applies to channels of tidal rivers and to the sea, for the public has no right to use the highway of such tidal water for such a purpose (b).

691. Where the soil of the foreshore is in the Crown and no mischief or injury is likely to arise from the exercise of such a right by the public, it is not to be supposed that an unnecessary and injurious restraint upon the practice would be enforced by the Crown as the parens patrie (c).

Where the foreshore belongs to a subject he is entitled to the right of shooting thereon (d).

Where the foreshore is parcel of a manor it forms part of the demesne lands, for it is part of the waste of the manor (e), and a grant of free warren will therefore extend to and include the foreshore (f).

(2) Artillery and Rifle Ranges.

Regulation
by bye-laws.

692. Where any land, the use of which can be regulated by bye-laws under the Military Lands Acts, 1892 and 1900 (g), abuts on any sea or tidal water or shore, or where rifle or artillery practice is or can be carried on over any sea, tidal water or shore from any such land, bye-laws may be made in relation thereto to secure the public from danger (h).

Interference with private or public rights.

693. If a bye-law injuriously affects or obstructs the exercise of any private right of any person, that person must be compensated (i).

When this restriction first originated is unknown, but it appears from a commission of the 5th June, 1280, enrolled on the Patent Roll, 8 Edw. 1, m. 15 d., that by reason of an ancient ordinance (now lost) the King did not grant free warren except over the demesne lands of the grantee. Notices.

694. Before consenting to a bye-law, the Board of Trade must cause notice to be given by advertisement or otherwise in the locality in order that any town, harbour authority, or other local authority or person interested may have an opportunity of making objections. These objections must be considered, and the Board must make such inquiries as appear to be necessary for the purpose of ascertaining that the bye-law will not unreasonably interfere with any public right (l).

695. If the Board of Trade, after such inquiries, is satisfied that the restriction of any public right is required for the safety of the public or for the exigencies of the military or naval purpose for which the area to which the bye-law applies is used, the Board may consent to the restriction of the public right to such extent as in all the circumstances of the case seems reasonable (m). Where any part of the area to which the bye-law applies is vested in the Crown and under the management of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, their consent in writing must be obtained (n).

Consent of Trade.

696. After a bye-law is made, the boundaries of the area affected must be marked out by permanent marks, but if this cannot be conveniently done, the boundaries must be described in the bye-laws, and while the area is in use for military or naval purposes sufficient means must be taken to warn the public from entering the area (o).

purpose either on foot or in bathing machines. This rule applies whether the foreshore is the property of the Crown or of a private person (p).

698. A right to use the foreshore for the purpose of bathing may be gained by custom or prescription either by the permanent or temporary inhabitants of a vill, parish, or district (q).

699. The right to bathe, if it exists, must be exercised in conformity with the general law, which forbids indecency, and it is an indictable offence, punishable as a misdemeanour, to bathe at any place where persons cannot bathe without indecent exposure. It is no defence that as long as living memory extends there has been a usage to bathe at that particular spot (r).

700. In certain localities (s) the local authority has power to make bye-laws (t) for fixing the stands for bathing machines, and the limits within which persons of each sex shall be set down for bathing, and within which they may bathe; for preventing indecent exposure; for regulating the manner in which bathing machines shall be used and the charges to be made for the same (u); and for regulating the distance at which vessels and boats plying for hire for pleasure shall be kept from persons bathing within the prescribed limits (a).

The local authority may also make bye-laws with regard to any public bathing, whether from machines or not, for regulating the hours of bathing, and for enforcing the provision and maintenance by persons providing accommodation for public bathing of life-saving apparatus or other means of protecting bathers from danger (b).

SECT. 2.
The Seashore.

Effect of licence.

(v.) Seaweed.

702. There is not at common law a general right in the public of entering on the foreshore for the purpose of taking seaweed (d).

water mark.

Seaweed cast above the high-water mark is the property of the owner of the land there (c), and when cast on or growing on the foreshore it is the property of the owner of the foreshore, who can maintain trespass or trover for the taking thereof (f); and possession of the foreshore is sufficient to support such actions against trespassers (g); but drifted and ungathered seaweed is not the subject of larceny (h).

The regular taking of seaweed by the owner of the foreshore or his licensees is evidence of his possession and ownership of the foreshore (i). On the other hand, the taking of seaweed by the public does not displace a title to the foreshore founded on an ancient grant explained by the user of the grantees (k).

Seaweed below the low-water mark belongs to the sovereign within whose territory it is situated, and the lord of a manor or a subject can only establish a title thereto by a grant from the sovereign, or by such long and undisturbed enjoyment as to give him a title by prescription (l).

Below low-
water mark.

703. A right to take seaweed from the foreshore may be acquired in exactly the same way as the right to any other profit à prendre is acquired (m).

Acquisition of right to take seaweed.

A grant of a right to take seaweed involves in it a grant of a way over the land if it cannot be taken without (n).

(vi.) Shells.

704. The public has no right to take shells from the foreshore, Shells.

although there may be a general right to take the shell-fish which are there (o).

(vii.) Gravel, Stones, and Sand.

Ownership of gravel etc.

705. Gravel, stones, and sand, even when washed up by the sea on to the foreshore, are part of the freehold and belong to the owner of the foreshore (p), who may deal with them as he pleases and license others to do so (q), provided that such acts do not amount to the removal of a natural barrier against the inroads of the sea (r), or cause injury to the land abutting on the foreshore.

Right to take gravel etc.

706. A right to take gravel, stones, and sand is a profit à prendre, and can only be successfully claimed by the same class of persons who are able to sustain a claim to a profit à prendre in alieno solo (s). Consequently inhabitants of a parish, or occupiers of land, cannot, either by custom, prescription or grant, have a right to take sand, stones, or gravel from the foreshore, whether vested in the Crown or in a subject, for the purpose of manuring their lands or repairing the highways in the parish (t), and highway authorities are in the same position (a).

authorities.

707. Highway authorities may take stones for the repair of the highways in their parishes from any foreshore therein, making satisfaction for damage done to the lands by carrying away the stones, but the consent of the owner of the land or a licence from the justices must also be obtained (b). In no case may they take stones from the foreshore if the removal will cause damage or injury by inundation to the lands adjoining or increase the danger of encroachments of the sea (c).

708. All persons resident and dwelling in the counties of Devon and Cornwall may take sea-sand below the full sea mark for the bettering of their land and for the increase of corn and tillage, paying the duties in force in 1609 or such reasonable compositions as by agreement with the owners of the soil shall from time to time be made (d).

Rights in Devon and Cornwall.

(viii.) Wreck.

709. Wreck of the sea is a royal franchise, and is one of the prerogative rights of the Crown (e). Except when the right has been granted out to a subject, it belongs to the Crown.

Persons entitled to wreck.

In the county of Cornwall the right of wreck belongs either to the Duke of Cornwall or to a subject, except when the right may have escheated or become vested in the Crown by purchase (f).

In the Counties Palatine the right of wreck belonged originally to the Earls Palatine as part of the jura regalia (g).

In Wales the Lords Marchers, spiritual and temporal, who had wreck of the sea within their lordships before the English common law was extended to that country, have that franchise confirmed to them by statute as though it had been expressly granted by charter (h).

Except as above indicated, a subject can only make title to wreck by charter or prescription at common law (i).

(d) Stat. (1609) 7 Jac. 1, c. 18, ss. 1, 2. This statute is not declaratory of the common law (Macnamara v. Higgins (1854), 4 L. C. L. R. 326; Howe v. Stowell (1833), Alc. & N. 348, 356), though Hall on the Seashore, p. 208, argues the contrary. It does not in any way interfere with private rights (Calmady v. Rowe (1848), 6 C. B. 861, per MAULE, J., at p. 891); and it is evidence that the foreshore may belong to a subject (Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 6 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 26)). The practice of taking sand by the residents in these counties recited in and legalised by this statute has its origin in a grant by Richard, King of the Romans, allowing all the inhabitants in Cornwall to take sea-sand without payment, and confirmed by King Henry III. on the 28th June, 1261 (Chart. Rot. 45 Hen. 3, m. 2, No. 11). This charter shows that the foreshore within the county, by the reign of Henry III., had ceased to belong to the Crown; see note (q), p. 364, ante.

(e) Stat. De Prerogativa Regis (17 Edw. 2, stat. 2, c. 13); see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 210 et seq. Before the passing of this statute the Crown had in a great many places parted with its rights. Richard I. is said to have released the Crown right to wreck throughout the kingdom, but his successors resumed the prerogative again (Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 7 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 40)); see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, pp. 1 et seq., 69 et seq., 139 et seq. As to the definition of "wreck," see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., p. 548.

The Earl of Cornwall had it by charter per totum comitatum, except where it had at the time of the charter been granted out; for instances of such grants, see Quo Warranto Rolls, Cornwall. SECT. 2.

The

What is wreck.
Effect of grant.

710. Wreck can only be taken above the low-water mark, and then only when the tide is out, because nothing is wreck whilst it floats, but as soon as it is fixed to the ground, though the water be round it, it becomes wreck (k).

711. A grant of a right to wreck does not itself confer any right to the soil over which it is to be taken, because prima facie the soil over which it is to be taken and the right itself belong to the Crown, and the Crown may grant both to one individual, or it may grant the soil without the wreck, or the wreck without the soil (l).

The grant carries with it a right of egress and regress to take it (m), and a grantee has a special property in wrecks within his liberty from the time they become wrecked and to all goods washed ashore, though they subsequently are shown by their owners claiming them within a year and a day not to be wreck of the sea, and he may maintain trespass against the captor though the taking was before any seizure on his behalf (n).

Claim by town etc.

712. Wreck may be claimed as parcel of or belonging to a hundred or as parcel of an honour or a manor (o), or to a town (p), and it may be included in a grant of liberties in terrâ et in aquâ, on stronde and on streame (q).

Foreshore.

713. Though a grant of wreck per se does not carry a right to the foreshore over which the wreck is to be gathered, yet, if the grant is coupled with words which indicate that the grantee is the owner of the foreshore, such as, for instance, wreckum maris infra manerium suum, or if the grant is not forthcoming and the right is claimed by prescription infra manerium, there is a great presumption that the foreshore was parcel of the manor (r).

Instances of grants of the soil and wreck to one person are very numerous (see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, pp. 48, 81, 470, 641); but examples of grants of wreck without the soil are not; see ibid., p. 648.

A grant of a manor with a right to wreck, or royal fish, raises a presumption that the Crown intended to grant the foreshore with the manor (s). If by any means the right to wreck comes again to the Crown it merges in the Crown, and if the Crown grants out the manor or lands in respect of which the right was previously enjoyed such grant does not pass the wreck unless there are apt words in the grant to do so (a).

SECT. 2.
The Seashore.

714. Title to wreck by prescription may be made by showing user by the taking of wreck when it happens, or the receipt of the proceeds of wreck after it has been sold by the Crown, allowances by justices in eyre of the right, judgments in actions in respect of the right (b), and payments made for burying dead bodies cast ashore (c).

Prescription.

SUB-SECT. 7.—Jurisdiction.

(i.) Judicial County.

715. Foreshore, whether on the sea coast or on an arm of the sea which is within the body of a county (d), is within the jurisdiction of the civil and criminal courts.

Courts having jurisdiction.

Formerly, foreshore on the sea coast, when covered with water, was within the jurisdiction of the admiral for all purposes (e), but now that jurisdiction is limited to certain matters (f).

Nevill's (Sir Henry) Case (1286) and Constable's (Sir John) Case (1575). The following, amongst other expressions, support this presumption: "infra dominium suum" (Close Roll, 5 Ric. 2, m. 9; Coram Rege Roll 25 Edw. 3, m. 49); "ratione domini nostri" (Inq. Ad q. d. 5 Edw. 3, 19); "super terram suam" (Inq. Ad. q. d. 5 Edw. 3, 70); "per omnes terras suas super mare" (Charter Roll, 54 Hen. 3, m. 7, 1 n.); "in omnibus dominiciis suis" (Charter Roll, 54 Hen. 3, m. 8); "super feodum, ecclesie sue" (Quo Warranto Rolls, printed ed. p. 348); "super solum suum" (Coram Rege Roll 13 Edw. 2, m. 41); for other expressions, see also Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore.

SECT. 2.

The Seashore.How far within parish.(ii.) Administrative Parish.

716. Foreshore, whether on the sea coast or on tidal rivers, is primâ facie extra-parochial, because it primâ facie belongs to the Crown (g), but it may be shown to be within a parish, and the burden of proving this is upon those who assert it (h).

On the 25th December, 1868, every accretion from the sea, and the part of the seashore to low-water mark and the bank of every river to the middle of the stream, which was not on that day in any parish, was for all civil parochial purposes annexed to and incorporated in the adjoining parish (i).

SUB-SECT. 8.—*Defences against Encroachments.*Duty of Crown.

717. It is part of the prerogative and is the duty of the Crown to preserve the realm from the inroads of the sea by appropriate defences, and every subject has a right to have that duty performed, but the courts are powerless to enforce it (k).

Duty of subject.

718. The same rule applies to a subject, because, as he derives his title to his land from the Crown, he can only take it subject to the Crown's duties. In his case the courts have jurisdiction to restrain him from removing a natural barrier to the sea, if by so doing he would cause an injury to his neighbour's lands, or expose them to the inroads of the sea (l). The subject, however, is not bound to do actual work to protect his lands (m), or to prevent his neighbour's lands from being inundated, unless he is bound by his tenure to keep out the sea (n).

719. A subject may erect groynes or such other defences as are necessary for the protection of his lands on the sea coast, though such erections may have the effect of rendering it necessary for his neighbour to do the same (p); but in the case of non-tidal, tidal, or navigable rivers he must not do any act in the alveus of the river which might injure another riparian proprietor, or be an interference with the navigation (q). He may, however, erect a fence or bulwark on the bank (r). Such acts may be evidence of ownership of the soil on which they are placed (s), or only evidence of an easement (t). Erection of

An extraordinary natural event does not cease to be "an act of God" merely because it has happened before; it is enough that it is extraordinary, and such as could not reasonably be anticipated' (ibid., per Fry, J., at pp. 515, 516). (t) Philpot v. Bath (1905), 21 T. L. R. 634, C. A., where the placing of stakes on the foreshore to protect a house was held in the circumstances to amount only to an easement and not to have been done animo possidendi.

(w) The term "port" in the Harbours Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 159), s. 14, was interpreted in Nicholson v. Williams (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 632, 640, to mean the fiscal port as defined by treasury warrant, and not to make such prohibition for the protection of such port, harbour, haven, or the works thereof; this power does not affect the rights of property, privileges, jurisdictions or any powers of conservancy belonging to any corporate body, lord of a manor, or other person whatsoever (x).

SECT. 3.—Ports and Harbours.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Definition.

Different meanings.

721. The term "port" is used to denote either a harbour, haven, or place of safety for ships and their cargo whilst being loaded or discharged (a), an area for certain purposes, such as pilotage, sanitation and registration of vessels (b), a franchise in the hands of the Crown or a subject (c), or an area for fiscal purposes (d).

Franchise
port.

722. A port which is a franchise is quid aggregatum, consisting of (1) something that is natural, namely, a haven or access of the sea whereby ships may conveniently come; safe situation against winds where they may safely lie, and a good shore where they may well unlade; (2) something that is artificial, such as quays and wharfs and cranes and warehouses, and houses of common receipt; and (3) something that is civil, namely, privileges and franchises such as jus applicandi, jus mercati, and divers other additaments given to it by civil authority (e).

It has a vill, city, or borough as its head for the receipt of mariners and merchants, and may include more than the bare place where ships unlade, and sometimes extends many miles (f).

a natural port, though the court said that the jurisdiction of the Board of Trade did not extend all over the coast of the kingdom, but only over such portions thereof as are within the ambit of a fiscal port, overlooking the fact that the fiscal ports comprise the whole coast. By the Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), s. 11, a port appointed by Treasury warrant is deemed to be a port within the meaning and for the purposes of the Harbour Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 159), and of any other public Act for the protection of ports, harbours, shores, and navigable rivers. It has not been decided whether this Act applies to shingle above the high-water mark of ordinary tide; compare A.-G. v. McCarthy, [1911] 2 I. R. 260, 300.

(x) Harbours Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 159), s. 28. The effect of this saving clause on the rights of owners of foreshore has not been interpreted; see Burton v. Hudson, [1909] 2 K. B. 564; Nicholson v. Williams (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 632, 640; Anderson v. Jacobs (1905), 93 L. T. 17. A bond fide claim of right as owner of the foreshore to take shingle ousts the jurisdiction of the justices to impose a fine (Burton v. Hudson, supra).

(f) Hale, de Portibus, c. 2; Exeter Corporation v. Warren (1844), 5 Q. B. 773 (the port of Exeter includes Teignmouth).

723. A fiscal port is an area of the coast formerly defined by Royal Commission and now by Treasury warrant (g). By such warrant the Treasury may appoint any port and declare limits to the port and appoint proper places there to be legal quays for the lading and unloading of goods (h). In these ports the Commissioners of Customs may appoint stations or places where ships arriving or departing are to bring to for the boarding or landing of officers of customs, and the particular places where ships laden with any particular cargo are to moor or discharge; and may declare in what ports goods cleared for drawback or from the warehouse are to be carried or water-borne to be put on board any ship for exportation, or taken from a ship for importation (i).

Ports and Harbours.
Fiscal port.

Sub-SECT. 2.—Creation of Ports.

724. Ports which are a franchise in the hands of the Crown may be created by proclamation, but when in the hands of a subject must have originated by grant, prescription, or Act of Parliament, for a subject is incapable of making a port even for the landing of his own goods by his own tenants, and he cannot land any goods which are customable on his own lands, or anywhere which is not a public port and a place where such goods may be landed (k).

Mode of creation.

725. The Crown may grant the franchise of a port over the grantee's land, or over the lands of any other person, and, unlike the case of a market, a port may be created to the damage of another port so long as it is outside the precincts of such other port (l). For a port is a gate of the kingdom and for the benefit of the kingdom, but it requires an Act of Parliament to obstruct or wholly deface a port or to exclude ships from resorting thereto (m). The King when granting to a subject a franchise port may confer upon him, as a consideration for dedicating his land to the public and of his repairing the port, a right to levy dues in respect of the various commodities imported (n).

Grant of franchise.

(g) Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), s. 11.

(h) These ports are deemed to be ports for the purposes of the Harbours Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 159), and other public Acts for the protection of the ports, harbours, shores and navigable rivers of the United Kingdom (Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), s. 11). As these fiscal ports embrace the whole of the coast of the kingdom, this provision was probably enacted to remove the doubt raised in Nicholson v. Williams (1871), L. R. 6 Q. B. 632, as to the jurisdiction of the Board of Trade to prohibit the taking of shingle from the coast within the ambit of a port.

(k) See title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 458, 459. However commodious a place may be for the shelter of ships, it is not a port unless established by authority of the Crown (Hale, de Portibus, cc. 3, 4, 5). As to inferring that a port has been created, see Foreman v. Whitstable Free Fishers and Dredgers (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 266. As to ports in the Duchy of Cornwall, see note (q), p. 364, ante. SECT. 3.

Ports and Harbours.

Definition.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Dockyard Ports.

726. Wherever the King has any dock, dockyard, steam factory yard, victualling yard, arsenal, wharf, or mooring in, on, or near to any port, harbour, haven, roadstead, sound, channel, creek, bay, or navigable river there is a dockyard port; but until its limits are defined and regulations made for its conservancy, it is subject to the general law as to ports and harbours (o). Even when the limits have been defined and regulations made, any right of property, privilege or jurisdiction or any powers of conservancy belonging to anyone in, to, upon, or over any part of the port or of the shores and banks thereof are saved (p), and the public right of entering, navigating, anchoring, and mooring is unaffected thereby, except as to any special regulations made by Order in Council (q).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Ownership of the Soil of Ports.

Crown.

727. Where the port is a franchise and extends over tidal waters, the ownership of the soil is prima facie in the Crown on the same principle that the foreshore is presumed to belong to the Crown, but it may belong to the grantee or some other person, for the King can create a port without any regard to the question of who is the owner of the soil (r).

Grantee.

728. Except where by custom there is a right to land goods, the owner of a port must own some portion of the shore of the port, for otherwise he cannot make the wharves and landing places which are necessary for the enjoyment of the franchise, the King being unable to grant a liberty to unload on the bank of a port without the consent of the owner (s).

(o) Dockyard Port Regulation Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 125), ss. 2, 3. Orders in Council define the limits of and make regulations for the following dockyard ports: Berehaven, 12th August, 1907; 9th February, 1914; Chatham and Sheerness, 29th June, 1888; 24th October, 1911; 9th February, 1914; Cromarty, 19th December, 1913; Deptford, 29th February, 1868; Dover, 10th June, 1912; 9th February, 1914; Pembroke, 26th September, 1891; 9th February, 1914; Plymouth, 11th October, 1912; 9th February, 1914; Portsmouth, 18th December, 1912; Portland, 30th March, 1914; Queenstown, 10th August, 1903; Rosyth, 4th March, 1911; 9th February, 1914; Woolwich, 29th February, 1868. As to criminal offences in connexion with royal dockyards, see title CRIMINAL LAW AND PROCEDURE, Vol. IX., pp. 480, 773.

(p) Dockyard Port Regulation Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 125), s. 23. Thus the following, amongst other authorities, have jurisdiction: at Plymouth, the Cattewater Commissioners; at Chatham and Sheerness, the Medway Conservancy; at Woolwich and Deptford, the Port of London Authority; at Queenstown, the Cork Harbour Commissioners.

(q) Dunby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Anson, [1911] 1 K. B. 171, C.A.

(r) Where a subject claims a port by custom or prescription, the presumption is that he has not only the franchise, but the very water and soil within the port, for a portus maris is quid aggregatum, as a manor (Hale, de Jure Maris, co. 5, 6 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, pp. 22, 23).

(s) Hale, de Portibus, c. 6; Hale, First Treatise (Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, p. 352). For examples of the owner of a port not owning the soil, see the port of Newcastle, belonging to the corporation of Newcastle (Tynemouth's (Prior) Case (1292), Stuart Moore, History and Law of Foreshore, p. 111; A.-G. v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Corporation (1903), 67 J. P. 155); and the port of London, belonging to the Port of London Authority (River Thames Conservators v. Port of London

SUB-SECT. 5.—Conservancy of Ports.

SECT. 3.

Ports and Harbours.

Duty to protect public rights.

729. The King by his prerogative has the conservancy of all ports and harbours, and he is entrusted with the protection of the public rights in such places (l), and the grantee of a port takes it subject to the same obligations (u). At the present time the conservancy of ports is to a great extent regulated by statutory provisions (w). Every owner of a port is bound to conserve it so that it is reasonably fit for use as a port (a).

730. There are certain common law nuisances which may occur in ports (b), such as the filling or choking up of ports by sinking of vessels and throwing in of rubbish (c); the decay of wharves and quays and piers for the landing of merchandise and safeguard of shipping; the building of fresh obstructions, or enhancing of old ones, and the straitening of the port by building too far into it (d); or obstructing the mooring of vessels (e). These nuisances may be

(c) As to the duty of conservators to remove wrecks, see Harbours Act, 1745 (19 Geo. 2, c. 22), s. 3; title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 554, 642. It is an offence for the owner or the person having the command of a ship run on shore, sunk, stranded, or brought or driven in a ruinous or shattered condition into a haven, port, channel, or navigable river, to take away the rigging, tackle, and other valuable parts and to permit the hull to sink into the sand, for which justices may convict, and then issue a warrant for the removal and sale of the wreck, and after payment of the expenses of clearing the harbour and removing and selling the vessel out of the proceeds of sale, the overplus, if any, is to be given to the owner of the manor where the wreck happened (Harbours Act, 1745 (19 Geo. 2, c. 22), s. 3). As to the provisions regulating the discharge of ballast, filth etc. from ships and prohibiting its deposit below high-water mark or on land where it may be washed into the water by storm or floods, see stat. (1542-3) 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 9, s. 6; Harbours Act, 1745 (19 Geo. 2, c. 22); Harbours Act, 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 159), ss. 11, 13, 15, 16; United Alkali Co. v. Simpson, [1894] 2 Q. B. 116; see also title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., p. 644. There are also certain provisions regulating tin mining in the counties of Devon and Cornwall, so as to prevent the choking up of the ports of Plymouth, Dartmouth, Teignmouth, Falmouth and Fowey; see stats. (1531) 23 Hen. 8, c. 8; (1535-6) 27 Hen. 8, c. 23.

(d) It is a question of fact whether building in a port is a nuisance or not (Hale, de Portibus, c. 8); see p. 403, post. By the Public Harbours Act, 1806 (46 Geo. 3, c. 153), as amended by the Harbours Transfer Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 69), s. 15, it is an offence punishable by a fine of £200 to erect any pier, quay, wharf, jetty, breast or embankment in or adjoining any public harbour or any river immediately communicating therewith so far up as the tide flows without giving one month's notice of the intention so to do to the Board of Trade.

remedied by the same means as nuisances on a highway on land are remedied (j).

SUB-SECT. 6.—Port Tolls and Dues.

731. As an incident to a port there may be a right to take tolls and dues for the use of it, such as anchorage and tonnage dues (g). These dues may arise from the ownership of the soil of the port, or may be a consequence of the franchise independently of the ownership of the soil. The right to take dues in respect of a port may arise by Act of Parliament, grant, or immemorial usage (h).

732. Wherever the Crown has established a port with a suitable landing place, whether the port be naturally or artificially formed, if vessels avail themselves of the port a sufficient consideration for the port dues arises (i).

Where the toll is claimed in respect of a harbour or other locality which is not a port some consideration for the toll must be shown, unless it was imposed by Parliament, for a toll is a mode of paying for a public service, and must be for the public advantage and reasonable in amount (j).

The Crown cannot create a toll which affects the public right of navigation without some additional consideration, but it is not necessary that the benefit conferred by the owner of the toll be precisely that in respect of which the toll is demanded (k).

SUB-SECT. 7.—Conservancy of Dockyard Ports.

733. The conservancy of dockyard ports is vested in the King's Harbour Master for each port, and his duties when not specified in (j) Hale, de Portibus, c. 7; see title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., p. 574.

(g) Anchorage is a toll for every anchor cast in the port (Hale, de Portibus, c. 6; Gann v. Whitstable Free Fishers (1865), 11 H. L. Cas. 192). If an anchorage due is claimed in respect of the soil and not of a franchise port, it must be shown that the soil was originally in the precincts of a port, or that some service or aid to navigation was rendered by the owner of the soil, and the establishment of an oyster fishery, though it may be a public benefit, is wholly unconnected with the right of navigation and cannot be the foundation for such a due (Gann v. Whitstable Free Fishers, supra; Foreman v. Whitstable Free Fishers and Dredgers (1869), L. R. 4 H. L. 266); see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., pp. 458, 459. For various instances of dues that may be claimed, either in respect of the franchise or of the soil, such as ballastage, busselage, keelage, petty customs, lorage, prisage, towage, moreage, terrage, cranage, wharfage, houselage, tronage, pesage, and measurage, see Hale, de Portibus, c. 6. The origin of these, except ballastage, which arises from ownership of the soil, is either grant, custom, or prescription (ibid.). In the Thames the right of ballastage belongs to the Port of London Authority and the Thames Conservancy by statute, and not because they are owners of the soil; see p. 410, post.

SECT. 3.
Ports and Harbours.

Regulations
by Order in Council.

734. Regulations may be made by Order in Council prohibiting the mooring or anchoring of vessels so as to obstruct the navigation into, in, or out of the port; appropriating mooring spaces for the exclusive use of His Majesty's vessels (n); prohibiting or restricting the having of gunpowder or use of guns in any specified part of the port, and regulating the loading and discharge of gunpowder in the port; restricting the use of fire or light, and the having of combustible substances on board any vessel in any specified part of the port; regulating the speed of steam vessels in parts of the harbour; requiring the continuous presence of watchmen on board vessels of a certain size; and prohibiting or regulating the breaming (o) of vessels (o).

There is also power by Order in Council to make regulations for such other purposes as may seem necessary with a view to the proper protection of His Majesty's vessels, dockyard, or property, or for the requirements of the naval service (p).

735. On the joint recommendation of the Admiralty and Board of Trade His Majesty may make rules for preventing collisions between vessels in the port, or in the approaches thereto. The rules have to be obeyed by His Majesty's vessels and by merchant vessels, and have the same effect as if they had been made under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (q).

Prevention of collision.

736. The regulation and protection of each dockyard port is entrusted to the King's Harbour Master, who is appointed by the Admiralty (r). He has power to cause any vessel to be moved so that she is placed in the port in conformity with the provisions of the Order in Council relating to the port, and for that purpose may

The penalty for a breach of any of these regulations is not exceeding £10 (ibid., s. 6), to be recovered summarily (ibid., s. 17), and can be enforced by distress and sale of the vessel (ibid., s. 19). If by the wrongful act of another the owner of a vessel is compelled to pay a penalty or expenses and costs, he can recover from the actual wrongdoer (ibid., s. 16). For the provisions relating to similar matters in harbours generally, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 643, 644.

do all necessary acts (s). He and any person authorised in writing by the Admiralty may enter any vessel and search for gunpowder, shot or loaded guns, fire, light, or combustible substances had on board in contravention of the Order in Council, and may extinguish any such fire or light (t).

Removal of obstructions.

737. The King's Harbour Master may remove any wreck and other obstructions to the port or its approaches, or any floating timber that impedes the navigation, or any vessel laid by or neglected as unfit for sea service in a part of the harbour not specified for that purpose (u). The expenses of removal must on demand be paid by the owner of the thing removed; if not, the King's Harbour Master may sell it, and out of the proceeds pay all expenses incurred, rendering the surplus, if any, to the owner on demand; any deficiency may be recovered from the owner (w).

Removal of vessels.

738. The King's Harbour Master, whether representing the owner of the soil of a dockyard port, or in exercise of his statutory power, has power to remove from the port a vessel which enters the port not in the exercise of any right of navigation (a).

SUB-SECT. 8. — Repair of Ports.

Common law duty.

739. As the public has a right to use ports, whether tolls are payable in respect thereof or not, it is the duty of the owner of the port to take reasonable care that the port is in a fit state of repair, so that those who choose to navigate it may do so without danger to their lives or property (b). When a port is allowed to get into

(s) Dockyard Port Regulation Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 125), s. 11. Any expenses incurred in doing so must be paid by the master of the vessel (ibid.).

(t) Ibid., s. 12. His power appears to be limited to search (except as to fires and light), though he would have power to remove the vessel to the part of the harbour where such things are allowed to be on board; see ibid., s. 5.

(u) Ibid., ss. 13, 14. Besides the powers to remove wrecks above mentioned, the King's Harbour Master, as a person entrusted with the management and regulation of a harbour, has the powers of removal of wrecks given by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 530—534; see ibid., s. 742, defining "harbour," "harbour authority," "conservancy authority." As to the removal of wrecks, see, further, title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 554, 555.

(w) Dockyard Port Regulation Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 125, s. 15. These expenses are recoverable by summary procedure (ibid., s. 17).

(a) Such as, for instance, a vessel intended to be moored as a coal hulk for the supplying of ships with coal (Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Anson, [1911] 1 K. B. 171, C. A., per BUCKLEY, L.J., at p. 213). It is immaterial that under the regulations in force the King's Harbour Master cannot exclude generally merchant or private vessels from the port (ibid.).

(b) Mersey Docks Trustees v. Gibbs (1866), L. R. 1 H. L. 93; Lancaster Canal Co. v. Parnaby (1839), 11 Ad. & El. 2, 23, 230, Ex. Ch.; R. v. Williams (1884), 9 App. Cas. 418, P. C. There is a lack of reasonable care when after notice of a nuisance to the port the port authority omits to give any warning to persons resorting thereto (R. v. Williams, supra). The port authority cannot transfer its duty to see that the port is safe for navigation to persons who are not its servants, such as local Trinity House pilots (The Bearn, [1906] P. 48, C. A.). If a port authority advertises a certain depth of water in a dock sill, it must use reasonable care to see that there is sufficient water to enable vessels to get to that dock (Bede Steamship Co. v. River Wear Commissioners, [1907] 1 K. B. 310, C. A.). As to the maintenance and repair of harbours, see pp. 420, 421, post.

such a state that a public nuisance is created, in the absence of any special legislation relating to such nuisance, it may be remedied as a common law nuisance (c).

SECT. 3.
Ports and Harbours.

740. When a port is created or governed by Act of Parliament, the Act may contain special provisions as to its maintenance and repair (d), and may authorise this to be undertaken by some body other than the port authority (e).

Statutory
provisions.

SECT. 4.—Tidal Navigable Rivers.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Definition.

741. A "tidal navigable river" means a river which is subject to the vertical flow and reflow of the ordinary tides and navigable as such. It includes the navigable parts of the river where the fresh water is arrested by the tidal influence, and is not restricted to the part affected by the horizontal flow of the tide (f).

Rivers
included.

The expression "navigable," when used in relation to tidal water, means not only that navigation is possible, but that there must be ebb and flow of the tide (g). It is a relative and comprehensive term containing within it all such rights upon a waterway as in relation to the circumstances of that locality are necessary for the full and convenient passage of vessels or boats (h). The flow of the ordinary tides is strong prima facie evidence of a public navigation (i); but it is not conclusive, for, if the river is broad and deep, calculated for the purpose of commerce, it may be assumed to be a public navigation, but if it is a petty stream, navigable only at certain periods of the tide, and then only for a very short time, and by very small boats, it may be presumed that it never has been a public navigable river (k).

Meaning of
"navigable."

742. Moreover, a river in which the ordinary tides flow is not necessarily a public navigable channel, although sufficiently large for navigable.

(e) As to the liability of harbour authorities for non-repair, and as to powers of such authorities and the Trinity House to remove obstructions, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 554, 641, 642, 647. By the General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861, Amendment Act (25 & 26 Vict. c. 19), s. 8, the Board of Trade is empowered to repair or remove any works authorised by any Provisional Order which are abandoned or suffered to fall into decay. The majority of the owners of franchise ports have obtained from time to time additional powers for their government by private and local Acts of Parliament.

Ryan, supra*); see also pp. 400 et seq., post.

SECT. 4. that purpose; for it may have ceased to be navigable by Act of Parliament, writ of ad quod damnum and inquisition thereon (l), by act of Commissioners of Sewers (m), or by natural causes. When a Tidal Navigable Rivers. navigable river has been obstructed for a long time, and there is nothing to show how this obstruction arose, it must be presumed to have been done by one of the above modes, and the obstruction cannot be removed (n).

Right of public. 743. The question whether a river is navigable or not is one for a jury (o); but once a river is subject to the public right of navigation, no act by a private person, however long continued, will destroy the right of the public (p).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Ownership of Soil.

River foreshore. 744. The ownership of the foreshore in tidal navigable waters is determined by the same rules as the ownership of the seashore is ascertained (q).

River bed. The ownership in the bed under such waters belongs to the Crown either by virtue of the prima facie presumption that it is waste of the kingdom not granted or by reason of escheat, forfeiture, or purchase, or it belongs to a subject; this is ascertained by the same rules of law by which the ownership of the seashore is determined (r). It does, however, happen that in a great many instances the proprietary right of the owners of manors abutting upon tidal navigable waters which are inter fauces terre extends below the low-water mark, and even as far as the centre of the river opposite to such manors (s).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Rights not Amounting to Ownership.

(i.) Landing.

Extent of right. 745. As an incident of navigation there is no right of landing or embarking persons or goods on the foreshores or banks of tidal navigable waters, except at such places as necessity or usage have appropriated to those purposes, or in cases of peril, or necessity (t).

(s) Thus, the medium filum aquæ is the common boundary of the river Severn, whatsoever course the river takes (Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 1 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 6); Fitzhardinge (Lord) v. Purcell, [1908] 2 Ch. 139). Riparian manors extending to the midstream of tidal waters are also found in the Tyne, Tees, Trent, Ouse, Derwent, Mersey, Dee, Leven, and in such comparatively narrow rivers as the Crouch, Roach, Itchen, Helford etc. In the broader parts of the Thames and Humber, the manors appear to be limited to the foreshore. The oyster ground at Whitstable is an instance of ownership of the soil below low-water mark, and not inter fauces terre.

(t) Hale, de Portibus, c. 6; Blundell v. Catterall (1821), 5 B. & Ald. 268.

In ports there are certain landing places at which customable goods must be landed, and if there are not free landing places, yet a person is entitled to land thereat on tendering the lawful dues (u).

SECT. 4.
Tidal
Navigable Rivers.

(ii.) Towing.

746. There is no right at common law of towing along the banks of tidal navigable waters, for the right of navigation is simply a right of way and is limited to the waterway, and involves no right of property in the banks (u).

Extent of
right.

In places there may be such a right by custom, statute, or grant from the owner of the bank (x).

(iii.) Access.

747. Every owner of land abutting on water, whether it be the sea, or a tidal or non-tidal river, or a lake, is entitled to access and regress to and from that water opposite to his frontage (a).

access.

It is essential that the land in respect of which the right of access is claimed is in actual daily contact with water, for which purpose lateral contact is as good as vertical (b). It is true that the bank of a tidal river or of the sea, the foreshore of which is left bare at low water, is not always in contact with the water, but it is in such contact for a great part of every day in the ordinary and regular course of nature, and such contact is amply sufficient to support such a right of access (c).

There is a right to land and store goods in cases of shipwreck by statute, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., p. 550.

(u) See Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), ss. 11, 14, 143; Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), s. 33; and p. 422, post.

(x) Peirse v. Fauconberg (Lord) (1757), 1 Burr. 292 (a towing path of each side of the river Tees between Yarnum bridge and Low Worsall established). Slight evidence of usage is generally sufficient to support a claim to a tow-path on the ground of public convenience (Winch v. Thames Conservators (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 458). For instances of rights of towage on the Bristol Avon, Tyne, and Trent, see Hale, de Portibus, cc. 6, 7. By stat. (1531—2) 23 Hen. 8, c. 12, it is declared that time out of mind there has been a towing path on each side of the river Severn, 1½ feet broad, and a penalty of 40s. was imposed for obstructing persons using the path.

A. (non-tidal river); Marshall v. Ulleswater Co. (1871), L. R. 7 Q. B. 166 (navigable lake). There is no distinction in principle between riparian rights on navigable and non-navigable water, and the decision in Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., supra, is applicable to every country in which the same general law of riparian rights prevails, unless excluded by some positive or binding authority of the lex loci (North Shore Rail. Co. v. Pion (1889), 14 App. Cas. 612, P. C.). As to user of the shore and banks of tidal waters for fishing, see title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., pp. 575, 582 et seq.

748. If in the course of time the water gradually recedes from the riparian land owing to the land gaining upon the water, the right of access is not affected because the accreted land becomes clothed with riparian rights (d).

A person who owns land not in actual contact with water can only have a right of access to the water by special grant, or because his land has been granted to him by the owner of the riparian lands in such terms that the grantor is estopped from denying that the land granted is riparian land (e).

749. The right of access to water belongs jure nature to the bank or riparian land, being in no way connected with the ownership of the land covered with water and wholly distinct from the right of navigation which every member of the public is entitled to enjoy (f). It is a private and not a public right, and any interference with it is actionable without proof of special damage (g).

750. The right of access may be exercised not only by the owner of the riparian land but by his lessees and licensees, and the riparian owner and those whom he permits have a right to use the foreshore as a means of access to the water; he must not, however, do anything to interfere with the public right of navigation or put down anything which disturbs the soil of the foreshore though if there is an erection on the foreshore, such as a pier or causeway, he may use it as a means of access (h).

As incident to the right of access there is the right of landing or of passing over the shore or bed at all states of the water for that purpose, even when such shore or bed is private property (i) and also of passing over any obstruction that prevents the enjoyment of the right (k).

751. In the exercise of his right of access the riparian owner is not entitled to keep vessels on the soil adjacent to his land for any longer period than is required to load or unload them ; but, in the case of tidal waters, if he cannot load or unload in one tide, he may keep them there until this operation is completed (l).

His right is only to be exercised at reasonable times and for a reasonable time, and he must not moor vessels opposite to his land so as to interfere with the right of access to any other riparian land, or so as to impede the navigation of the water which everybody is entitled to use (m).

SECT. 4.
Tidal Navigable Rivers.

752. Interference with the private right of access is actionable without proof of special damage ; but if the interference complained of is an interference with the right of navigation, which thereby affects the right of access, then special damage must be proved (n), for interference with the right of navigation which only renders access more difficult, but not impossible, is an interference with a public and not a private right, and special damage must be proved by the riparian owner who complains of such interference (o).

Interference with right.

753. The right of access is of such a nature that any works authorised by any statute incorporating the Lands Clauses Acts which take it away (p) are an "injuriously affecting" of the riparian land so as to give a right to compensation (q).

SUB-SECT. 4.—Jurisdiction.

754. Tidal navigable rivers, when they are inter sauces terræ, form part of the adjoining county for both civil and criminal purposes. In the case of the death of a man or a mayhem done on great ships being or hovering in the main streams of great rivers beneath the bridges nigh to the sea, the Admiralty, the Central Criminal Court, and the courts of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery have a concurrent jurisdiction to try prisoners (r).

SECT. 4.

Tidal
Navigable Rivers.Parochial
purposes.

755. Before the 25th December, 1868, it was a question of evidence whether the foreshores and beds of tidal navigable rivers were within the adjoining parishes, for primâ facie they belonged to the Crown and were therefore extra-parochial(s). On that day the part of the seashore to the low-water mark and the bank of every river to the middle of the stream which was not within a parish was annexed to and incorporated with the parish to which such part or bank adjoined for all civil parochial purposes(t).

SECT. 5.—Non-tidal Rivers and Streams.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Ownership of Soil.

Presumption of ownership.

756. The bed (u) of non-tidal rivers and streams belongs, in the absence of any evidence of ownership to the contrary, by presumption of law, in equal moieties to the owners of the riparian lands (a).

This presumption that the riparian owners own the bed of the river usque ad medium filum aque applies whether that land is freehold, copyhold, or leasehold (b), and whether the river is navigable or non-navigable(c).

Grant of adjoining land.

757. A grant or lease of land described as abutting on a river made by a person who is in a position to part with the soil of the bed is sufficient to pass half the bed of the river without any ADMIRALTY, Vol. I., p. 59; and of the county courts having admiralty jurisdiction, see ibid., pp. 127 et seq.

(s) See p. 382, ante.

(t) Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 122), s. 27. There is some doubt whether the bed of such rivers is annexed to the adjoining parishes. If the term "seashore" is here used in its ordinary meaning as being foreshore and is not restricted to foreshore on the sea coasts (see Mellor v. Watmole, [1905] 2 Ch. 164, C. A.), then the bed of such river is not annexed to the adjoining parishes; and this seems to be the meaning, because the expression "bank of the river to the middle of the stream" is the apt expression with regard to non-tidal rivers, but not to tidal rivers; see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Fisheries, pp. 113–119.

(u) For the meaning of "bed," see Menzies v. Breadalbane (Marquis) (1901), 4 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 55, where it was held that when the bed is divided by an island into a main and subsidiary channel, the latter being at times dry, the medium filum aque is the centre of the bed from bank to bank and not the centre of the main stream; and see also title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., p. 583.

(b) Tilbury v. Silva (1890), 45 Ch. D. 98, C. A., per KAY, J., at pp. 108, 109: "It is a law of conveyancing that, primâ facie, where a man grants land on the bank of a river, having himself the soil ad medium filum, without any words describing the boundary to be the medium filum, the soil ad medium filum passes by the grant. It is a law by which you ascertain the parcel of a grant. It does not matter whether the land is copyhold, freehold, or leasehold"; Davies v. Jones (1902), 18 T. L. R. 367; Doe d. Freeland v. Burt (1787), 1 Term Rep. 701.

reference in the document to the river (d), and the fact that the river is of great breadth does not affect the case (e).

The presumption may be rebutted by showing (1) that there exists over the bed of the moiety in question a several fishery not belonging to the grantor, because the presumption that the owner of a several fishery is owner of the bed displaces the presumption that arises in favour of the riparian owners (f); or (2) that at the time of the grant of the riparian land there was no intention on the grantor's part to part with the bed ad medium filum aque (g); to ascertain this, the facts known to the parties at the time of the conveyance may be investigated, but not circumstances which afterwards occur (h); or (3) that the grantor had not the bed of the river to convey (i). The riparian presumption refers only to the origin of title, for the right to the bed of the river is not inseparably bound up for ever with the right to the land, and an owner may retain one and part with the other (k).

758. Ownership of the bed of a non-tidal river may be proved by documentary evidence of title supported by possession (l), or by possession sufficient to raise the presumption of a lost grant, or to give a statutory title, but what amount of acts of possession is requisite must vary according to the circumstances (m).

Jenkins*, [1901] 2 Ch. 401; as to proof, see title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., p. 587); ownership of cyots and islands (Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 6 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 36)); making and scouring a ditch in the bed and making a causeway (Hindson v. Ashby, supra); taking of gravel, stones and sand, and placing stakes in river, though even these, if done by a riparian owner, may not be sufficient to upset the presumption that the owner of a several fishery owns the bed (Hanbury v. Jenkins, supra); building of piers, boathouses, and cutting of reeds (R. v. Old Alresford (Inhabitants) (1786), 1 Term Rep. 358).

Non-Tidal
Rivers and

Rights of Rivers made navigable.

Extent of
right.

759. The rules of law which determine the ownership of the sea-shore when there is either a gradual and imperceptible increase or decrease, or a sudden change, apply equally to non-tidal waters, and the ownership of the bed of non-tidal rivers is determined by these rules (n).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Navigation on Non-tidal Rivers.

760. The public may have a right to navigate non-tidal rivers, but there is no general common law right to do so. Such right as the public has can only have arisen by grant from the owners of the soil of such rivers, or by immemorial usage, or by Act of Parliament, and the right to navigate is established by evidence similar to that which would raise the presumption of a right of way on land (o).

761. A person at his own charge may make his private stream navigable for boats and barges either by the making of locks or cuts or drawing together other streams. This does not necessarily imply that the public has any rights of navigation thereover; for the owner may destroy it or apply it to his own private use. If, however, it was made navigable at a common charge or by a public authority, or has been freely devoted to the public use for a long time or has been made by way of recompense or compensation for some other public stream that has been stopped for the owner's convenience, then the navigation is public (p).

762. The right of navigation in non-tidal water may extend to the whole width of the river, or may be limited to a portion or particular channel of the river, or to certain reaches thereof (q).

Certain rivers seem to have been common highways or public streams from time immemorial, for Magna Charta, c. 26, enacts that all weirs were to be put down throughout the Thames and Medway, also in all England except on the sea coast. This was held to apply only to navigable rivers (Leconfield v. Lonsdale (1870), L. R. 5 C. P. 657). There are numerous instances of rivers being made navigable by Act of Parliament, such as, for instance, the Wye and Lugg (stat. (1662) 14 Car. 2, c. 14 (private)); the Itchen (stat. (1664) 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 12 (private)); see Hargreaves v. Diddams (1875), L. R. 10 Q. B. 582; the Avon from Christchurch to New Sarum (stat. (1664) 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 12); the Medway (stat. (1664) 16 & 17 Car. 2, c. 12 (private)); the Witham (R. v. Betts (1850), 16 Q. B. 1022). As to fisheries in relation to navigation, see title FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., pp. 591, 592. As to navigation generally, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 372 et seq.

(p) Hale, de Jure Maris, c. 3 (Hargrave, Law Tracts, p. 10), which continues as follows: "If he purchaseth the King's charter to take a reasonable toll for the passage of the King's subjects and puts it in ure these seem to be devoting and, as it were, consecrating of it to the common use. . . . For no man can take a settled or constant toll even in his own private land for a common passage without the King's licence"; see, however, Simpson v. A.G., [1904] A. C. 476, where it was held that the appellant, who by charter was entitled to take tolls from persons using locks constructed on his lands, was not bound to maintain them, and that there was no public highway through the locks.

The right of navigation, when established over non-tidal waters, is similar in character to the right of navigating tidal waters (r).

SECT. 5.
Non-Tidal Rivers and Streams.

SUB-SECT. 3.—Towing and Landing.

763. As in the case of tidal navigable rivers, there is no right to tow boats along or to land upon the banks of non-tidal waters as an incident to navigation (s), but such rights may be created by custom, statute, or grant (t). Rights of public.

SECT. 6.—Lakes and Pools.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Ownership of Soil.

764. The soil of lakes and pools, even when they are so large that they might be termed inland seas, does not of common right belong to the Crown (u), and the law as to the ownership of the soil is the same as that applied to inland non-tidal waters whatever the size of the water space may be (v). Principles applied.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Navigation.

765. As in the case of inland non-tidal waters, so in lakes and pools, there is no common law right of the public to navigate thereover, but the right may be acquired by the same means as it is acquired in non-tidal waters (a). Right of the public.

Towing paths when they lawfully exist are not affected by an Act of Parliament for enclosing waste lands bordering on the river (Simpson v. Scales (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 496). When a towing path is abandoned and another substituted under an Act of Parliament, a private right of way over the abandoned path is not transferred to the substituted path (Kinloch v. Neville (1840), 6 M. & W. 795).

Lakes and Pools.

Part III.—Rights of Navigation.

SECT. 1.—On Tidal Watercourses.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Nature and Extent of the Right.

Nature of right.

767. The right of navigation in tidal waters is a right of way thereover for all the public (c) for all purposes of navigation, trade, and intercourse. It is a right given by the common law, and is paramount to any right that the Crown or a subject may have in tidal waters, except when such rights are created or allowed by Act of Parliament (d). Consequently every grant by the Crown in relation to tidal waters must be construed as subject to the public rights of navigation (e). It is not a right of property; it is merely a right to pass and repass, and to remain for a reasonable time (f).

Extent of right.

768. Primâ facie the right of navigation extends to all waters that are tidal, though this is not always the case (g). Where the right does exist in a river it extends to the whole space over which the tide flows, and is not suspended when the tide is out too low for vessels to float (h).

Exercise of right.

769. Though the public has this paramount right over tidal waters, it must be exercised reasonably, and where it conflicts with a right of fishing the right must not be abused so as to work an injury to the right of fishing (i).

(b) Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 421. Regulations have been made for Windermere by Order in Council of the 19th November, 1902 (Stat. R. & O., 1902, No. 869).

(i) Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb, supra; Anon., supra. A vessel may ground in a fishery in the ordinary course of navigation

770. The public right of navigation has, as incident thereto, the right of anchoring, and of mooring and grounding in the ordinary course of navigation, and that without any liability to the payment of tolls or other acknowledgment to the owner of the soil, except where such person happens to be the owner of a port, or has the right to demand some acknowledgment for the use of the soil in return for some benefit conferred (k)

Anchoring
etc.

771. As part of the right of navigation there is the right to load and unload cargo, and to remain on the waterway for any period, so long as the right is not abused so as to work a private injury (l). The right of navigation does not, however, include the right of landing on or mooring to the banks, or of towing along them, except in places where custom has given the right (m).

Loading etc.

772. The right of navigation can only be extinguished by an Act of Parliament, or by a writ of ad quod damnum and inquisition thereon (n), or in certain cases by Commissioners of Sewers (o), or by natural causes, such as the recession of the sea, or an accumulation of mud rendering navigation impossible (p). A vessel which must ground on a fishery as the tide falls should only be anchored at the usual and customary place for vessels of her size (The Swift, [1901] P. 168), and damage caused by negligent navigation over a fishery renders the vessel liable for the consequences in an action in rem (ibid.). (where it was held that the right of mooring was an ordinary incident of navigation and included the right to fix moorings into the soil and so to occupy a portion of the navigable highway for an indefinite period). The right of user is, therefore, in this respect more extensive than a right of way on land, as to which see title HIGHWAYS, STREETS, AND BRIDGES, Vol. XVI., pp. 49 et seq. Where, however, the moorings are for the use of a vessel which is not used in navigation, but for the purpose of coaling vessels used in navigation, this right to occupy the soil does not exist, for such a purpose is not an incident of navigation (Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries, Ltd. v. Anson, [1911] 1 K. B. 171, C. A.).

is removed, the right of navigation revives, and when a tidal river takes a new channel the right of navigation follows it (q).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Obstruction of the Right of Navigation.

773. Without the authority of Parliament (r), or an inquisition ad quod damnum, no one can lawfully put into tidal waters, or maintain there, anything which is an obstruction or nuisance to the right of navigation, and it is no excuse that the obstruction only occurs at certain states of the tide (s).

It makes no difference to whom the soil on which the obstruction is placed belongs, for neither the Crown nor a subject may use the soil for any purpose amounting to a nuisance (t).

Erection becoming obstruction.

774. When an erection has stood in a waterway for a great number of years without being an obstruction, yet, if it becomes so by reason of a change in the course of the navigable channel, it may be abated (u). This, however, does not apply to weirs the erection of which has been sanctioned by Parliament (v).

Obstruction

authority.

Wallasey Local Board* (1873), L. R. 9 C. P. 62. By the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 16, railway companies are empowered to execute works in navigable tidal rivers as well as in non-navigable rivers, but they have no power to divert or alter the entire course of such rivers or obstruct the whole of the navigation (Abraham v. Great Northern Rail. Co. (1851), 16 Q. B. 586); see title RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 654, 655, 659, 673, 696, 697. By stat. (1539) 31 Hen. 8. c. 4, the Corporation of Exeter is empowered to remove obstructions in the river Exe (Exeter Corporation v. Devon (Earl) (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 232).

(t) Ibid.; see title NUISANCE, Vol. XXI., p. 512.

(u) Williams v. Wilcox, supra.

(v) By the reign of John the navigation of rivers and ports had become so obstructed by weirs that Magna Charta, c. 26, enacted that "all weirs from henceforth shall be utterly put down through Thames and Medway and through all England except by the sea coast." This was not entirely effective, and the Hundred Rolls of Edward I. have numerous presentations of weirs obstructing navigation. A weir if erected before the reign of Edward I. is legalised by stat. (1350-1) 25 Edw. 3, st. 4, c. 4, although obstructing the whole or part of the navigable river. Several statutes were subsequently passed and numerous commissioners appointed to survey navigable rivers and to restrict weirs; see Stuart Moore, History and Law of Fisheries, pp. 24, 171 et seq.

the fact that they have authorised an erection is some evidence that it is not an obstruction (x) to the public right of navigation (y). No right to obstruct can be acquired by any length of user, though user without complaint for a great many years may be evidence that there is no obstruction in fact (a).

SECT. 1.

776. A nuisance to navigation may take these shapes:—It may be an actual erection in the soil, such as piers, wharves, bridges, piles and weirs (b); or it may be the mooring of floating structures (c); or the deposit of unbuoyed anchors (d); or the deposit of rubbish and filth causing a silting up of the navigable channel (e); or the straitening of the sides of the channel (f); or a deposit of oyster beds to the hindrance of navigation (g); or failure to cleanse and keep in repair when bound to do so (h); or obstructing navigation by unreasonable user (i); or obstruction in accordance with statutory requirements but without authority (k); or obstruction endangering safe navigation (l); or obstructing navigation by building a bridge (m); or obstruction by unreasonable delay in opening a swing bridge (n).

Whether an obstruction is a nuisance or not is a question of fact; but the court does not interfere when the encroachment is of a trifling nature (o), or when the encroachment, though an injury to navigation, confers on the public at that place a benefit of a much greater amount than the injury occasioned (p).

Wreck causing obstruction.

778. When a vessel is sunk in a navigable river so that it may be an obstruction it is the duty of the owner so long as he has possession and control to take precautions to prevent other vessels striking against it, but once he has abandoned possession, or some authority has undertaken the duty of watching the wreck, his obligation ceases (q).

The duty of watching and lighting a wreck may be cast by statute on the authority whose duty it is to remove wrecks (r).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Protection of the Right of Navigation.

(i.) In General.

Abatement.

779. Where a private person sustains special damage by reason of any obstruction to navigation he may abate it, but only in so far as is necessary to enable him to exercise his right, and he is not justified in doing this on the ground that it is a nuisance to the public (s).

Action.

780. Instead of his remedy by abatement he may have his action in respect of his special damage (t). Other remedies for the

SECT. 1.
On Tidal
Watercourses.

(ii.) Port of London.

781. The limits of the Port of London commence at an imaginary straight line (known as the landward limit) drawn from the high-water mark on the bank of the Thames at the boundary line between the parishes of Teddington and Twickenham to high-water mark on the Surrey bank immediately opposite to the point first mentioned, and extend down both sides of the Thames to an imaginary straight line (known as the seaward limit) drawn from the pilot mark at the entrance of Havengore Creek in Essex to the Land's End at Warden Point in the Isle of Sheppey, and include all islands, rivers, streams, creeks, waters, watercourses, channels, harbours, docks, and places contained in the above limits, and all places which under any Act of Parliament are to be deemed to be within the Port of London, but not any part of the river Medway above the seaward limit of the jurisdiction of the Medway Conservancy, or any part of the river Swale, or any part of the river Lee or Bow Creek within the jurisdiction of the Lee Conservancy Board, or any part of the Grand Junction Canal (d).

782. Within these limits the Port of London Authority has power to take such steps as it may consider necessary for the improvement of the river and the accommodation and facilities afforded in the Port of London (e), and, so far as navigation of the Thames below the landward limit of the Port of London is concerned, this authority has all the powers that had been conferred on the Thames Conservancy before the 31st March, 1909 (f).

(d) Port of London Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 68), Sched. V.

(e) Ibid., s. 2 (1). The Port of London Authority is a body corporate consisting of eighteen elected members, ten appointed members, and a chairman and vice-chairman appointed by the Port Authority (ibid., s. 1). The undertakings of various dock companies (see title METROPOLIS, Vol. XX., p. 410) were transferred to the Port of London Authority by the Port of London Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 68), s. 3; and this authority was further empowered to purchase certain other undertakings (ibid., s. 4), piers and landing places (ibid., s. 5).

Prior to 1908 the conservancy of the Thames from Cricklade to Yantlet Creek was vested in the Thames Conservancy. The powers of the Thames Conservancy which have been transferred to the Port of London Authority included all the powers and authorities, rights and privileges with respect or relating to the conservancy and regulation of the Thames and of the several rivers, streams and watercourses, within the flow and reflow of the tides of the Thames, and upon the banks, shores

783. The powers of dredging the river within the limits of the Port of London may by provisional order of the Board of Trade be extended to parts of the Thames Estuary and the shores thereof lying to the eastward of the seaward limit of the port (g).

SECT. 2.—On Natural Inland Watercourses.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Extent and Nature of the Right of Navigation.

Rights of public.

784. As the soil of non-tidal rivers is prima facie the property of the riparian owners and not of the Crown, there is no common law right in the public of navigating thereover, but the right may have been acquired by dedication or presumed dedication as evidenced by long user, or by Act of Parliament (h).

The right of navigation in non-tidal waters when acquired by the public is simply a right of way similar to a right of way on land (i). It may extend over the whole width of the watercourse, or be restricted to a particular part thereof (j). It carries with it no right to the soil, or any right of fishing or fowling or of recreation over the soil (k).

and wharfs of the Thames and Port of London which immediately before the passing of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. cxlvii.), were vested in or might be exercised by or which had heretofore been exercised by Her Majesty in right of her Crown or which at any time before the passing of that Act were given or granted to or had been exercised by or which were vested in or might be exercised by the mayor and commonalty and citizens of London or by the mayor and aldermen of the City or by the Common Council or by the Lord Mayor by any statutory enactment in force immediately before the passing of that Act, and not repealed by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), or by prescription, usage, or charter or otherwise, and were vested in the conservators immediately before the passing of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 60, and the powers set out at pp. 408 et seq., post, and the powers of dredging the channel of the Thames from the Nore to Gravesend conferred by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1905 (5 Edw. 7, c. cxviii.). The powers and duties of the Watermen's Company with respect to the registration and licensing of craft and boats, the licensing of lightermen and watermen, and the government, regulation and control of lightermen and watermen, including the appointment of plying places and inspectors, have been transferred to the Port of London Authority, but the power of licensing lightermen and watermen may, by arrangement, be exercised by the Watermen's Company on behalf of the Port Authority, unless the authority otherwise determines (Port of London Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 68), s. 11). As to the powers of the Commissioner of Police in the metropolitan area, see title POLICE, Vol. XXII., p. 471.

(g) Port of London Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 68), s. 7 (2) (d).

(h) See note (a), p. 398, ante. As to canals and other artificial watercourses, see titles FISHERIES, Vol. XIV., p. 581; RAILWAYS AND CANALS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 779 et seq.

By no amount of user can the public acquire a right to recreate (Bourke v. Davis, (1889), 44 Ch. D. 110; see also Simpson v. A.-G., [1904] A. C. 476, 492). In the case of the River Thames, it is provided by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 72, that the public may navigate the Thames for either pleasure or profit: see p. 411. post.

785. The right of navigation does not include a right of towing along the banks (l), though such a right may be acquired in any of the ways above mentioned (m). It is doubtful whether the right of anchoring or of placing fixed moorings, which is an incident of the right of navigation in tidal water, is also an incident of navigation in non-tidal water, except in cases of necessity or at places where such a right has been acquired by custom (n).

Ancillary
rights.

786. A subject may make a watercourse navigable by means of locks and cuts and obtain a charter enabling him to take tolls from boats using them, but if there is no evidence that the way through the locks has been dedicated as a highway the subject is not bound to maintain the locks, or allow the public to navigate through them (o).

Locks.

SUB-SECT. 2.—(Obstruction.

787. Obstructions which existed at the time the right of navigation in non-tidal water originated cannot be removed, for the right to navigate must have been acquired subject to the continuance of such obstructions; but obstructions placed subsequently may be remedied in the same way as obstructions in tidal waters (p).

How far recoverable.

788. When the whole width of a river was a common passage for boats and ships before the reign of Edward I. weirs erected since that time are unlawful, and so too is any enlargement of ancient weirs (q). Once the right of navigation exists over a particular locality no one may without the authority of Parliament place anything there which is a nuisance to the navigation (r).

Weirs.

789. Where a river changes its course, the right of navigation passes with it (s), even though the change is sudden (t), but

(m) See p. 393, ante.

(n) Thus, where the right of navigation owes its origin to dedication, and, as stated in Orr Ewing v. Colquhoun (1877), 2 App. Cas. 839, 854, is simply a right to pass through a private estate in order to get to some place, similar to a right of way on land, it follows that there is no right to delay on the way longer than is reasonably necessary; compare Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb (1877), 5 Ch. D. 713, per JESSEL, M.R., at p. 721. Moreover, in non-tidal water, navigation is acquired subject to the rights of the landowners, whilst in tidal water the owner of the soil takes subject to the rights of navigation. Whyte* (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 286). An ancient brushwood weir must not be converted to a stone weir (Weld v. Hornby (1806), 7 East, 195).

when the part of the river over which there does exist a right of navigation becomes blocked there is no right to have abated an obstruction in the other part of the river the removal of which would enable the navigation of the river to be continued over that other part (u).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Protection of the Right.

(i.) In General.

Means of protection.

790. The right of navigation on natural inland watercourses is, in the absence of any express parliamentary enactment, protected by the same means as the navigation on tidal watercourses is protected (a).

(ii.) Thames.

Conservancy
jurisdiction.

791. For the purpose of conservancy by the Thames Conservancy the Thames means so much of the rivers Thames and Isis as are between the town of Cricklade and the landward limit of the Port of London and so much of the river Kennett as is between the common landing-place at Reading and the river Thames and all locks, cuts and works within the said portions of such rivers (b).

Powers of conservators.

792. Subject to the special provision of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (c), the conservators have power to improve and complete the navigation of the Thames whether for profit or pleasure, and for that purpose may make, erect, maintain, alter, extend, discontinue, remake and re-erect such tow-paths, banks, roads, bridges, ferries and ways, for the towing of vessels with horses or otherwise, and such locks, pounds, turnpikes, wharfs, weirs, bucks, sluices, winches, spikes, dams, floodgates, engines, toll-houses and watch-houses for the use of the navigation as they think fit (d); and may regulate the flow of water and prevent mill-owners from drawing off the water below a certain level (e).

Sunken
vessels.

793. The conservators must cause any vessel sunk or stranded in the Thames to be raised, or blown up, or otherwise destroyed; if the vessel or any part of her or her cargo is saved they must be sold in such manner as the conservators determine; the latter may recoup themselves out of the proceeds for the expenses incurred and any expenses incurred in watching and controlling the vessel, and the surplus, if any, is held for the person entitled thereto; the owner of the vessel is liable for any deficiency (f).

(a) See pp. 404, 405, ante. In respect of many waters, Parliament has conferred the duty of conservancy on statutory bodies or other corporations; as, for example, in respect of the Thames, on the Thames Conservancy; the Severn, on the Severn Commissioners; the Trent, on the Trent Navigation Commissioners. Where Parliament has created an authority to repair and cleanse a non-tidal river, such authority is not authorised to cut a new channel in the bed of the river so as to give access to a wharf (Partheriche v. Mason (1774), 2 Chit. 658).

794. The conservators may remove anything causing an obstruction in the river, or to the use of the towing-path, or any floating timber which obstructs the navigation, but when the obstruction is a tree, bush, shrub or projection the conservators may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction to order the owner to cut, prune, or lop such tree, bush, or shrub or remove the projection, and on his failing to comply with the order the conservators may do the work (g).

795. When any wharf, pier, or artificial bank is out of repair so as to be dangerous to life or to vessels lying alongside or to the navigation, the conservators may order the owner to repair to the satisfaction of their engineer, and on his failing to do so the conservators may do the work (h). They may also remove at the cost of the owner broken, dangerous, or useless piles, mooring chains, or other nuisances, and remove or shorten any waterways, causeways, stairs, or other projections injurious to navigation (i).

796. For the purpose of making and improving and keeping the navigation free from obstruction the conservators may dredge, cleanse, and scour the river (k), or alter, deepen, restrict, enlarge, widen, diminish, lengthen, shorten, straighten and improve the bed and channel (l), and reduce or remove any shoals, shelves, banks, mudbanks, or other accumulations and shorten any bend and remove any angle, and abate or remove all obstructions and all nuisances and abuses whatsoever in the river or on the banks or shores thereof (m).

For the repair of the towing paths and roads and the straightening and improving the course of the Thames, and filling up and raising creeks, inlets, bends, flats, and sloblands in or adjoining the river, they may dredge and raise gravel, sand, and other substances (n), and license persons to do so (o). 797. The conservators may license all erections on the bed or shores, and may maintain mooring chains, and remove on making compensation any private mooring chains in the tideway (q).

They may also erect such piers and landing places below Teddington Lock as they shall deem most advantageous to the public and causing the least obstruction to the navigation, and may remove or close them, though if it is a landing place which has been marked by the Watermen's Company that is affected a new one must be made in its place (r).

Beacons.

798. The conservators are the authority for erecting and maintaining the beacons necessary for the navigation, but no lighthouse may be placed below London Bridge. As such authority they have power below Teddington Lock to remove, alter, or screen any light on or near the river which they think likely to mislead persons navigating (s).

Offences.

799. Any person commits an offence who without lawful excuse in a reasonable time after notice fails to remove any obstruction to the towing path (t), or who unloads, throws, puts, causes, or suffers to fall any ballast, stone, earth, mud, ashes, dirt, soil, rubbish, or refuse from manufacture into the Thames or on the shore or into any tributary of the Thames within three miles of the Thames so that it may be carried into the Thames, or knowingly puts any of those things anywhere where they are likely to be carried by floods or extraordinary tides into the Thames (u).

It is also an offence for any person to obstruct the navigation by

SECT. 2.
On Natural Inland
Water-
courses.

800. Subject to the provisions of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (b), all persons, whether for pleasure or profit, may go and be, pass and repass, in vessels over and upon any and every part of the Thames through which Thames water flows, including all such backwaters, creeks, tide channels, bays and inlets as form part of the river (c). The conservators may, for purposes connected with the navigation or with any public works or for the preservation of public order, for a limited time exclude the public from specified portions of the river (d).

Rights of public.

801. This right of navigation includes the right to anchor, moor, or remain stationary for a reasonable time in the ordinary course of pleasure navigation, subject to such restrictions as the conservators may make by bye-laws (e).

Right of
etc.

The conservators are bound to make special regulations to prevent annoyance to any occupier of a riparian residence by reason of the loitering or delay of any houseboat or steamboat; and the riparian owner may exercise any legal remedies he possesses for preventing the anchoring, mooring, loitering, or delay of any vessel (f).

802. Besides complying with any bye-laws relating to navigation made by the conservators, every vessel navigating the Thames must be navigated with care and caution and at a speed and in such a manner as not to endanger the lives of, or cause injury to, persons or endanger the safety of, or cause damage to, other vessels or any mooring, or to the banks of the river or other property, and special care must be used when passing vessels of all kinds, especially those of the smaller class and such as are employed in dredging or removing sunken vessels or other obstructions (g).

Speed of vessels.

Bye-laws.

803. The conservators may make bye-laws for, inter alia, regulating the navigation, preventing obstructions, compelling vessels to carry lights, prescribing, below Teddington Lock, limits above which various classes of vessels to be defined by such bye-laws and used only and principally for carrying passengers or for excursions shall not navigate, preventing disturbances of the navigation, purposes of recreation, and regulating the passage of vessels on occasions when large crowds may assemble (h).

Harbour master.

804. The conservators may appoint a harbour master, who has power to regulate the time and manner in which a vessel may enter into, go out of or lie in the river, and her position whilst there, the manner in which she shall take in or discharge cargo or ballast (i), and to remove any vessel disobeying his orders (k).

Part IV.—Harbours, Docks, Piers and Wharves.

SECT. 1.—Harbours, Docks and Piers.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Construction.

Power to construct

805. Whenever a harbour, dock, pier or wharf (l) is to be constructed and may be an obstruction to navigation, or in respect of the use of which it is desired to have power to levy tolls and rates,

(h) Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 191. On so much of the Thames as is within the limits of the Metropolitan Police area, the Chief Commissioner may also regulate the passage of vessels on like occasions (ibid.); see, further, title POLICE, Vol. XXII., pp. 467, 471. Within the Port of London, the Port Authority may arrange that the Thames Conservators shall exercise the powers of the Port Authority for regulating the passage of vessels on the occasion of a regatta, boat race, or other similar occasion (Port of London Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 68), s. 10).

(i) Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), ss. 126, 128. This power does not apply to any part of the river where by Act of Parliament it is declared that no vessel shall lie, nor has the harbour master any power to unmoor or remove from any part appointed as a boarding landing, or quarantine station any vessel placed there under the authority of the Commissioners of Customs, or to place a vessel within low-water mark alongside any quay, custom-house station, or any place appropriated to the service of the customs (ibid., s. 128). By ibid., s. 127, assistant harbour masters may be appointed.

(k) Ibid., ss. 130, 132. Disobedience to the harbour master's orders is punishable by a fine not exceeding £5 (ibid., s. 129).

(l) Except where otherwise stated, this part of the present title relates to the construction and maintenance of harbours, docks, and piers to which, by Act of Parliament, the provisions of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), are made to apply, and the expression "the harbour, dock, or pier" means the harbour, dock, or pier and the works connected therewith authorised by the special Act. For other definitions of "harbour," see note (n), p. 413, note (w), p. 420, post: Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 742; R. v. Hannam (1886), 2 T. L. R. 234, C. A. a special Act of Parliament must be obtained, unless the expense to be incurred does not exceed £100,000, in which case a provisional order may be obtained for that purpose from the Board of Trade (m).

SECT. 1.
Harbours,
Docks and Piers.

(i.) Under Special Acts of Parliament.

806. When a person or corporation (hereinafter referred to as the harbour authority (n)) is authorised by a special Act of Parliament to construct or improve a harbour, dock, or pier, it is usual to find incorporated by reference in that special Act all or some of the provisions of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (o). Where the special Act authorises the acquisition of land otherwise than by agreement, the provisions and restrictions in the Lands Clauses (Consolidation) Act, 1845 (p), apply (q).

Incorporation of statutes.

807. In addition to lands authorised to be compulsorily taken, the harbour authority may by agreement purchase lands for any of the following purposes, namely: making and providing additional yards, wharves and places for receiving, depositing and loading and unloading goods (r), and for the erection of weighing machines, toll houses, offices, warehouses, sheds, and other buildings or conveniences; and making convenient roads to the harbour, dock, or pier, or any other purpose which may be requisite or convenient for the formation and use thereof (s).

Purchase of lands.

Errors in the plans and books of reference deposited in compliance with the Standing Orders of the Houses of Parliament may, after ten days' notice to the persons affected, be corrected by two justices of the peace, and their certificate and plans and sections of alterations and the original plans and sections have to be deposited with the clerk of the peace for the county in which the lands are situate (t).

On the deposit of these documents the harbour authority may commence the works (u).

(m) General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 45), s. 3. As to the collection and recovery of harbour rates, see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 634 et seq.

(n) By the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 742, the term "harbour authority" includes all persons or bodies of persons corporate or unincorporate being proprietors of or intrusted with the duty or invested with the power of constructing, improving, managing, regulating, maintaining or lighting a harbour. For the purpose of limiting liability (see title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., pp. 612 et seq.) the term "owner of a dock" includes any person or authority having the control or management of any dock, including wet dock and basin, tidal docks and basins, locks, cuts, entrances, dry docks, graving docks, gridirons, slips, quays, wharves, piers, stages, landing places, and jetties (Merchant Shipping (Liability of Shipowners and others) Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 32), s. 2 (4), (5)).

(q) Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), s. 6.

(r) The term "goods" includes wares and merchandise of every description, and all articles in respect of which rates or duties are payable under the special Act (ibid., s. 3).

(s) Ibid., s. 20.

(t) Ibid., ss. 7, 9. Clerks of the peace are authorised to give certified copies of these documents, which are receivable in evidence (ibid., s. 10).

(u) Ibid., s. 8.

SECT. 1.
Harbours, Docks and Piers.
 Deviation.

808. When constructing the works the harbour authority must not deviate from the line laid down in the deposited plans more than the prescribed number of yards, and when no number is prescribed, then not more than ten yards, and the authority must not take or use for the purpose of deviation land not mentioned in the book of reference or certificate of the justices without the written consent of the owner of the land (a).

Consents required.

809. When the works are to be on the seashore or on any land between the high- and low- water mark, they must not be constructed without the consent of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests and Board of Trade, and then only according to such plans and under such restrictions and regulations as those departments approve of, and without the like approval these works may not be extended or altered (b). Alteration or deviation from the deposited plans must have the same approval (c).

If the harbour authority constructs the works without such approval, the Board of Trade, at the expense of the harbour authority, may abate and remove and restore the site to its former condition.

Where the works are in a navigable river and there is a conservancy authority, its approval must be obtained (d).

Warehouses
 etc.

810. As part of its undertaking the harbour authority may construct such warehouses, storehouses, sheds, and other buildings and works as the authority deems necessary for the accommodation of goods to be shipped or unshipped, and may erect such cranes, weighing machines and other conveniences, weights or measures, as it thinks necessary for unloading, loading, measuring and weighing such goods, and may hire persons to work the same; or the authority may lease the warehouses, wharves, cranes etc. for any period not exceeding three years (e).

(a) Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27). s. 11. "Deviation," as used in Acts of Parliament, simply means shifting the work in its integrity from one site to another which may be deemed more suitable; it does not imply a right not only to alter the situation of the work but in doing so to dispense with a half or two-thirds of it (Herron v. Rathmines and Rathgar Improvement Commissioners, [1892] A. C. 498, per Lord Watson, at 517).

(b) Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27). s. 12. It seems that under this Act the approval by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests and Board of Trade of works below the low-water mark is not required; though such works may not be done without the consent of the Crown when the Crown is owner of the bed. If the shore belongs to a private person his rights thereto must not be prejudiced, except in so far as power to purchase the same is given by the special Act (ibid.). As to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VII., pp. 122 et seq.; as to the Board of Trade, see ibid., pp. 102, 103.

(c) Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27). s. 13.

B. 497; title SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION, Vol. XXVI., p. 639, note (m). As to meters and weighers appointed by a harbour authority, see ibid., p. 643.

811. When the works are completed and the chairman of quarter sessions has certified that the harbour, dock, or pier is fit for the reception of vessels, the rates authorised by the special Act may be enforced (f).

SECT. I.
Harbours,
Docks and Piers.

If required by the Commissioners of Customs, the harbour authority must erect and maintain a watch-house and boathouse for the use of tide surveyors of customs, and a sufficient number of huts for the revenue officers, with all fit and necessary weighing materials (g).

Completion of works.

(ii.) Under Provisional Orders.

812. Any person or company intending to make application to the Board of Trade for a provisional order to authorise the construction of any pier, harbour, quay, wharf, jetty, or excavation on or near the shore of the sea, or of any creek, bay, arm of the sea, or navigable river communicating therewith, or to levy rates at any existing or at any new works, must, in the month of October or November preceding such application, publish a notice of their intention (h).

Notice of intention.

This notice must be inserted once at least in each of two consecutive weeks in some one and the same newspaper published in the city, town, or place where the works will be made, or if there is no such newspaper, then in a newspaper published in the county where the city, town, or place or some part thereof is situate, and if there be none, then in one published in the adjoining county, and the advertisement must also be inserted once at least in the London Gazette (i).

The notice is to be included in one advertisement, headed with a short title descriptive of the undertaking or application, and is to state the objects of the application, specifying such of the following when comprised among the objects of the application:—(1) Extension of time for completion of works already authorised; (2) power for a company to amalgamate with another; (3) power to sell, purchase, lease, or take on lease an undertaking; (4) amendment or repeal of any local or special Act of Parliament or of any former provisional order; (5) power to levy any tolls, rates, or duties, or to alter any existing tolls, rates, or duties; (6) the conferring, varying, or extinguishing of any exemption from tolls, rates, or duties, or of any other right or privilege; (7) constitution or alteration of the constitution of any harbour authority, and also a general description of the nature of the proposed works, the times and places at which the copy of the advertisement and of the plans and sections of the works will be made, and an office in London, or at the place to which the application relates, at which printed copies of the draft provisional order may be obtained (k).

813. On or before the 30th November there must be deposited at the Board of Trade and at the office of the clerk of the peace for the county, riding, or division in which the works or any part thereof are to be, a copy of the advertisement, and a proper plan and section, prepared according to such regulations as the Board of Trade may from time to time prescribe, of the proposed works (l).

On or before the 23rd December there must be deposited at the Board of Trade:—(1) the memorial of the persons asking for the provisional order, signed by one of them, headed in the same way as the advertisement, addressed to the Board of Trade and praying for a provisional order; (2) a printed draft of the provisional order as prepared by the memorialist; and (3) an estimate of the expense of the proposed works signed by the person making it. Printed copies of the proposed provisional order must also be deposited for public inspection at the custom-house, if any, of the port, outport, or creek to which the application relates (m).

Security for expenses.

814. The Board of Trade before making any order may require and take security for the payment of costs, charges, and expenses necessarily incurred by the Board in relation to the order (n).

Restrictions on making of order.

815. A provisional order, except such as relates to the levying of rates only, cannot be made without the consent of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests (o), and no order may abrogate or prejudice the right of His Majesty in right of his Crown, or of his Duchy or County Palatine of Lancaster, or of the Crown or Duke of Cornwall in right of that Duchy (p), or extend or be applicable to the Port of London or the river Thames, the port and harbour of Liverpool or the river Mersey, the port and harbour of Glasgow and the river Clyde, the port and harbour of Sunderland and the river Wear, the port of Kingston-upon-Hull or the river Humber, or the river Tyne or the port and harbour of Newcastle-upon-Tyne (q). Moreover, the promoter cannot obtain authority either by the provisional order or by any Act confirming the same to do anything to prejudice or affect any right, privilege, power, jurisdiction, or authority belonging to any person by charter, prescription, or local, personal, or private Acts for the purpose of executing any works such as are contemplated by the provisional order, or for the management or conservancy thereof, or for protecting the navigation of any tidal water or navigable river, or for making any river navigable, or otherwise improving, maintaining, or continuing the navigable passage thereof or any works connected therewith, or which shall, or shall tend to, prejudice or injuriously affect the access to and from any quay, pier, harbour, basin, dock, or inland navigation or the channels or passages thereof or leading thereto or therefrom, or the use and enjoyment of any quay, harbour, basin, dock, or inland navigation without the consent in writing of such person (r).

SECT. 1.
Harbours,
Docks and Piers.

The Board of Trade cannot make any provisional order taking away or abridging any right, privilege, power, jurisdiction, or authority given or reserved to any person or corporation by any local or special Act of Parliament without their consent in writing (s).

816. After such inquiries as the Board of Trade may think expedient, and with the consent of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests and, if required, of such persons mentioned above whose consent in writing is necessary, the Board may make a provisional order, but any such order is subject to the following provisions, namely: it must specify who are to be the undertakers, and may provide for the election or appointment of commissioners as undertakers, and may incorporate them. It may empower the undertakers to take a limited amount of land on lease or otherwise (t) by agreement, to levy and recover rates, to make and alter bye-laws for the management of the works subject to the approval of quarter sessions, and to borrow on mortgage or bond to a limited extent on the security of the rates with provision for payment of interest and repayment of principal (u).

order.

817. The provisional order may also incorporate by reference the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847 (w), the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (x), the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (y), or any part thereof, except such part of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (y), as relates to purchase of lands otherwise than by agreement, and provide for the due audit of the accounts and receipt and expenditure at the works (z).

Incorporated statutes.

In every provisional order made after 1862 the provisions of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (a), except when specially excepted, are incorporated therein (b).

of Board of Trade.

818. After the provisional order is made, a copy must be deposited with the clerk of the peace for the county, riding, or division in which the works referred to in the order are situate; and a notice of such deposit must be published in some newspaper circulated in that county (c).

819. After the Board of Trade has been certified that the deposit and notice have been made, and that fourteen days have elapsed since such advertisement, the Board must introduce a Bill in Parliament to confirm the order; but the order has no validity until confirmed (d). Petitions against the provisional order may be lodged, and petitioners are allowed to appear and oppose when the Bill is in committee as in the case of private Bills (e).

820. Before commencing the construction of any works authorised by the provisional order there must be deposited with the Board of Trade for its approval working drawings of the whole of the works, and the works must not be constructed otherwise than in accordance with such approval (f). After the works are commenced or constructed they must not be altered or extended without first obtaining the like approval (g).

The Board of Trade may, at the expense of the undertakers, at any time cause a local survey and examination of the works (h), and may, if any works have been commenced, constructed, altered, or extended without the Board's approval, at the like expense abate and remove them, and restore the site to its former condition (i). If any work is allowed to fall into disuse or decay, the Board may at the expense of the undertakers either repair and restore it, or abate and remove it (j). During the whole time of construction such lights for the guidance of vessels as the Board specifies must be exhibited and kept burning every night between sunset and sunrise (k). The works must be completed within five years after the passing of the Act confirming the provisional order, or within such time as the provisional order directs, and after such time the power of the order ceases except as to so much of the works as is completed (l).

The order must require a special resolution of the council to give the guarantee, that is, a resolution passed at one meeting of the council, published as directed by the order, and confirmed at a second meeting held not less than fourteen days after the first of such public notices has been given, and not less than three months after the first meeting^(q).

The order must also provide for the time and mode in which the money borrowed by the council is to be repaid, for the effectual recovery out of the fund or rate of the sum guaranteed and of the principal and interest, for the reimbursement of the fund or rate out of the income of the works or otherwise by the public body, and such other incidental provisions as may be necessary^(r).

824. The promoters of the order proposing to confer such power on the council must, a reasonable time before applying to the Board of Trade to settle the order, submit to the Local Government Board a statement of the proposal. If the latter Board declares that in its opinion the financial condition of the council does not warrant the proposed liability, the proposed provision for conferring such power must be omitted from the order^(s).

For the purpose of maintaining (v) a public harbour, as well as for its construction, improvement, and lighting, or for carrying into effect any other shipping purpose (w), a harbour authority may, with the written consent of the Board of Trade, whether it has or has not power to borrow under a special Act (a), obtain a loan from the Public Works Loan Commissioners of such sum of money as may be required subject to the following conditions, namely:—When the amount borrowed does not exceed £100,000, the interest is $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.; over that amount, interest is payable on the excess at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., or such higher rate not exceeding 5 per cent. as the Treasury thinks necessary to enable the loan to be made without loss to the Exchequer (b).

(w) "Harbours" here includes harbours properly so-called, whether natural or artificial, estuaries, navigable rivers, piers, jetties, and other works in or at which ships can obtain shelter or ship and unship goods or passengers; and "shipping purposes" includes the constructing or doing any work or thing that conduces to the safety or convenience of ships or that facilitates the shipping or unshipping of goods and the management and superintending the same and the maintenance of any lifeboat or other means of preserving life in case of shipwreck (Harbours and Passing Tolls, etc. Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47), s. 2).

Loans made under the Harbours and Passing Tolls, etc. Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47), and the above Act are not thereby given equality as to order of charge or of payment of principal or interest with any loan made or to be made under any special Act, except only as to such portion (if any) of the moneys raised under the Harbours and Passing Tolls, etc. Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47), as might have been raised under the special Act solely. As to the power of the Public Works Loan Commissioners to grant priority to mortgagees other than themselves, see Public Works and Fisheries Acts Amendment Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 81); and see title MONEY AND MONEY-LENDING, Vol. XXI., p. 60, note (q). upon all or any of the rates leviable by the harbour authority either alone or together with such other property or income as may be agreed on (d).

SECT. 1.
Harbours,
Docks and Piers.
Security.

827. When the harbour authority has power to levy rates and tolls immediately or prospectively, or is or may be entitled to any other income or property applicable to shipping purposes, it may borrow on the security of such rates, tolls, income, or property, or any part thereof (e).

828. If the harbour authority is the proprietor of a private harbour, money cannot be borrowed unless such regulations are made in respect of rates to be taken and the user of the harbour by the public as the Board of Trade approves (f).

Private
harbours.

For the purpose of making and enforcing such regulations an Order in Council may be made declaring that the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (g), applies to such harbour, and fixing a schedule of rates to be taken therein (h).

829. If the proprietor of such a harbour is only entitled to a limited estate therein, he may make his loan a charge on his estate and on the estate and interest of every person taking under the same settlement any estate or interest in such harbour in defeasance or expectancy or by destination on the determination of such limited estate, but the charge is subject to all incumbrances on the harbour subsisting at the time of the charge; and no advance may be made to any person entitled to a limited estate so as to charge the estate or interest of any person taking in defeasance or expectancy or by destination, except an amount specified in a certificate issued by the Board of Trade, and such certificates may only be issued when it has been proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade that the amount specified in such certificate has been properly expended upon the harbour (i).

Limited
owners.

SECT. 2.—Wharves.

SUB-SECT. 1.—Access.

830. A wharfinger has a right of access to the water from the part of the wharf which fronts the river, and he may also have a similar right of access from the sides of his wharf (j).

Right of access.

(d) Harbours and Passing Tolls, etc. Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47), s. 3 (2)—(4).

For the purpose of such loans to harbour authorities, the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 16), with respect to mortgages by commissioners applies, except when inconsistent with the Public Works Loans Act and Acts therein mentioned (Harbours and Passing Tolls, etc. Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47), s. 3 (6)).

(f) Ibid., s. 3 (7).

(g) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 27; see p. 413, ante.

(h) Harbours and Passing Tolls, etc. Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47), s. 3 (7).

(i) Ibid., s. 3 (8), (9).

(j) As to rights of access, see, generally, Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. (1876), 1 App. Cas. 662; and pp. 393 et seq., ante. In some rivers under the jurisdiction of conservators it is the practice to license the building of wharves with a right of access from the front only and not from the sides.

SECT. 2.

Wharves.

Extent of right.

831. The right of access is not necessarily co-extensive at all times with and limited to the riparian frontage, for a wharfinger may moor to his wharf a vessel of such a length as to overlap his neighbour's frontage, such a vessel being entitled in the ordinary course of navigation to navigate to the wharf and to be there for a reasonable time (k).

Overlapping vessel.

The rights of both riparian owners in this respect are, however, equal, neither having the right to the exclusive occupation of the space in front of his land for all time, and each being only entitled to use it at such times as are properly required for the exercise of his right of access (l). If, therefore, the neighbour wishes to use the access to his land, the overlapping vessel must be moved; and a person who places a vessel or other object in front of his land so as to prevent a ship getting to his neighbour's wharf is guilty of an unlawful obstruction of the right of navigation up to the wharf (m).

Passing over obstruction.

832. Where a person is entitled to access to a wharf he may pass over any vessel or object that is placed in front of the wharf which interferes with his right of access (n).

SUB-SECT. 2.—Remuneration for Use of Wharf.

Rates.

833. A man for his own private advantage may set up a wharf and may take what rates he and his customers can agree, but when the wharf is a public wharf, that is, a wharf to which anyone is entitled or bound to come, then the rates must be reasonable and moderate (a).

Deposit of goods.

834. When goods have been deposited with a wharfinger under the authority of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (b), Part VII., he is entitled to rent in respect of the same, and may at the expense of the owner of the goods do all such reasonable acts as he thinks necessary for their proper custody and preservation, and he has a lien on the goods for the rent and expenses (c).

Whenever goods are deposited with a wharfinger subject to a lien (1907), 96 L. T. 57). As to the appointment of legal and sufferance wharves for the deposit of customable goods, see Customs Consolidation Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 36), ss. 11, 14, 15.

for freight, and the lien is not discharged, and no deposit of a sum equal in amount to the lien is made, the wharfinger may, and if required by the shipowner shall, at the expiration of ninety days from the time the goods were deposited, or, if the goods are of a perishable nature, at such earlier time as he thinks fit, sell them by public auction, and from the proceeds he may deduct the expenses of the sale and his rent, rates, and charges (d).

SECT. 2.
Wharves.

When the goods are deposited in other circumstances the wharfinger has the ordinary lien of a bailee for his charges (e).

835. If the wharf is part of a harbour, dock, or pier constructed under a special Act which incorporates the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (f), and is owned by the harbour, dock, or pier authority, the authority is entitled to such remuneration for the use of the wharf as is specified in such special Act, and can enforce the payment thereof as directed by the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (g). SUB-SECT. 3.—Obligations of the Wharfinger.

836. As incidental to his business, a wharfinger may transport his customers' goods from their ships to his wharf, and, so long as he does not hold himself out as ready to carry goods for persons other than his customers, he is only liable for negligence, and is not subject to the common law liability of a common carrier (h). Safety of goods.

837. A wharfinger who for the purpose of profit to himself invites a ship to come to his wharf must give notice if there is any hidden danger attaching to the wharf or the berth alongside it, and if he has not satisfied himself that the berth alongside is reasonably fit, it is his duty to warn those in charge of the ship that he has not done so (i). He is also liable for the consequence of any orders Safety of berth.

Part V.—Rights and Obligations in Respect of Water.

SECT. 1.—Water Flowing in a Known Channel.

SUB-SECT. 1. —General Nature of Riparian Rights.

Extent of
rights.

838. Every riparian owner (a) on a natural watercourse flowing in a known and defined channel (b), whether on the surface of the land or below it, or in an artificial channel of a permanent character (c), has as incident to his property in the riparian land a proprietary right to have the water flow to him in its natural state in flow, quantity, and quality, neither increased nor diminished, whether he has yet made use of it or not. He has also the right that the water shall go from his lands without obstruction (d), and he is entitled to make certain uses of the water which comes to him whilst it is on his property (e).

Known and
channel.

By "known" is meant the knowledge by reasonable inference from existing and observed facts in the natural or pre-existing condition of the surface of the ground; the word is not synonymous with "visible," nor is it restricted to knowledge derived from exposure of the channel by excavation. "Defined" means a contracted and bounded channel, although the course of the stream may be undefined by human knowledge (f).

(k) Cory & Son, Ltd. v. France, Fenwick & Co., Ltd., [1911] 1 K. B. 114, C. A.

(a) This means the owner of land in actual contact with the watercourse. The distance the land extends back from the watercourse has no bearing on the definition; compare Crossley & Sons, Ltd. v. Lightowler (1867), 2 Ch. App. 478, where the plaintiff bought from the defendant a piece of riparian land for the purpose of gaining a right of action for pollution; see p. 358, ante. As to the meaning of "actual contact," see A.-G. v. Rowley Brothers and Orley (1910), 75 J. P. 81. See also title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., p. 588.

(b) As to the meaning of "known" and "defined," see the text, infra.
 (g) Whitmores (Edenbridge), Ltd. v. Stanford, [1909] 1 Ch. 427; Bailey & Co. v. Clark, Son and Morland, [1902] 1 Ch. 649, C. A.

The lower riparian owners must not interfere and stop the flow to their land, whilst the upper riparian owners must not send the water down in an irregular way so that it does damage (Robinson v. Byron (Lord) (1785), 1 Bro. C. C. 588); see p. 425, post.

As to water rights of riparian owners generally, see title EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE, Vol. XI., pp. 311 et seq. As to pollution, see pp. 432 et seq. post.

839. This right of every riparian owner does not depend on prescription, grant, or acquiescence of the riparian owner above, but arises ex jure nature as an incident of the land through which the water passes (g). For flowing water is publici juris only to the extent that all may reasonably use it who have a right of access to it, and that no one can have any property in the water itself, except in the particular portion which he may choose to abstract and possess (h).

Water Flowing in a Known Channel.

Origin of rights.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Rights Relating to Quantity of Water.

(i.) In General.

840. Although every riparian owner is entitled to enjoy the water which comes to him, the general rule above mentioned is subject to certain qualifications with respect to the quantity of water to which each riparian owner is entitled to receive, for he has not an absolute and exclusive right to the flow of all the water in the channel, but his right is always subject to the similar rights of all the proprietors of the lands on each side of the watercourse to the reasonable enjoyment thereof, and he must so use and apply the water as to work no material injury or annoyance to his neighbours opposite, above or below him, who have an equal right to the use of the water and an equal duty towards him (i).

Rights of other owners.

(ii.) Abstraction.

841. Every riparian owner has the right to take water from a natural stream for all ordinary purposes, namely, ad lavandum et ad potandum, or for domestic purposes, such as drinking and culinary purposes, cleansing, and washing, feeding, and supplying the ordinary quantity of cattle on his land etc. (h). If, in the exercise of his ordinary rights, a riparian owner exhausts the water altogether, the lower riparian owners cannot complain (l).

Ordinary
purposes.

(i) Embrey v. Owen, supra; Bickell v. Morris (1866), L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. 47. Where a stream to a mill was let down by a mine-owner, but the banks were raised so that there was no actual damage in the supply of water to the mill, the mill-owner, though entitled to protection, was refused an injunction on the mine-owner undertaking not to do further damage (Elwell v. Crouther (1862), 8 Jur. (N. S.) 1004). When there is a probability that the upper proprietor who is obstructing a stream will take means to pass on the right amount of water, an injunction need not be granted (Edleston v. Crossley & Sons, Ltd. (1868), 18 L. T. 15).

(k) Swindon Waterworks Co. v. Wills and Berks Canal Navigation Co. (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 697, 704; Owen v. Davies, [1874] W. N. 175.

C. 131. But it is a nuisance to withdraw the water from a navigable river to such an extent as to affect the right of navigation (Hind v. Manfield (1614), Noy, 103; and see Medway Navigation Co. v. Romney (Earl) (1861), 9 C. B. (N. S.) 575,

SECT. 1.
Water Flowing in a Known Channel.

Effect of non-user.

If a riparian owner does not require the water for these purposes, he may not appropriate to other purposes the amount which he would be entitled to take for domestic purposes (m).

He has also the right to use the water power caused by gravitation by weirs or other contrivances erected in the bed (n).

Extraordinary
purposes.

842. A riparian owner is not bound to use the rights that his riparian ownership gives him, but he may begin to do so whenever he likes, and he can maintain an action against any other riparian owner for any act which may infringe his rights, though he has never used them (o).

843. Besides the ordinary use of water mentioned above, a riparian owner has the right to use the water for any other purposes (which may be deemed an extraordinary use of water), provided that by so doing he does not interfere with the rights of other riparian owners above or below him (p).

Reasonable enjoyment.

844. He is entitled to the reasonable enjoyment of water as it passes his land as a natural incident of the ownership of the land (q).

Irrigation.

845. A riparian owner may use the water for the irrigation of his land if he returns it into the river opposite his land with no other diminution than that caused by absorption or evaporation attendant on the irrigation, but what amount of water for irrigation he may take depends on the circumstances of each case and on the rule that he must work no material injury to the riparian owners on the river below him (r).

Interception at source.

846. In the case of streams issuing from the earth and flowing in a natural channel to a stream, the owner of the ground from which the stream issues may not monopolise the water at its source so as to prevent it reaching the lands of riparian owners lower down the channel (s), but if, before it reaches a natural channel, it squanders itself over the land, and flows not in a defined channel, where the navigation was not in fact impeded, but more water was drawn off than was consistent with the purposes of the usual riparian user).

(r) Embrey v. Owen (1851), 6 Exch. 353. For a person to detain the water on his land so that it reaches his neighbour's land too late to be fully used by him is an injury of which the neighbour may complain (Sampson v. Hoddinott, supra). Where there is a right to irrigate it is immaterial what means are taken to turn the water on to the land, provided that not more than the lawful quantity of water is diverted (Green-slade v. Halliday (1830), 6 Bing. 379).

(s) Dudden v. Clutton Union Guardians (1857), 1 H. & N. 627; compare French Hoek Commissioners v. Hugo (1885), 10 App. Cas. 336, P. C., approving Miner v. Gilmour, supra, and Van Breda v. Silberbauer (1869), L. R. 3 P. C. 84.

or flows through an artificial channel, the owner of such land may appropriate it to his own use or divert it (t). Building a well round the place where the stream issues from the earth to improve its mode of issue therefrom, thus making it flow in an artificial channel for a short distance, does not destroy the natural character of the stream so as to entitle the owner of the land on which the spring is to appropriate the water to his own use (u). If the stream reaches the place where it issues from the earth by percolation, the owner of the ground may intercept the percolating water and use it as he pleases (a).

SECT. 1.
Water Flowing in a Known
Channel.

847. Where a person has acquired the right to abstract water from a natural channel for a particular purpose, he cannot use it for other purposes (b), or increase the amount he takes. Thus, if he has acquired the right to have a pond replenished from a river, he may cleanse the pond, but he must not enlarge it, so that thereby a greater quantity of water be taken from the river (c). Similarly, if he has the right to take water by a channel of a certain size, he may not enlarge it so as to divert more water to the prejudice of another proprietor (d).

Limited user.

848. A riparian owner may grant to the owner of land not abutting on the stream a right to abstract water therefrom, or may supply him with water, provided that he takes only a reasonable quantity with reference to the size of the stream and the rights of his neighbours (e); but the owner of the back land does not thereby acquire any rights as against other riparian owners, unless his grantor has appropriated the water to a beneficial use before delivering it to the back landowner (f).

Grant of
water.

849. The abstracting of water for the purpose of supplying a town is not only an extraordinary use of water, but is not a right which pertains to riparian ownership at all, and if by this means the common law rights of a riparian owner are injuriously affected, the abstraction may be stopped without proof of sensible injury having been done (g).

SECT. 1.
Water Flowing in a Known Channel.

Passage of fish.

Working of mines.

Manufacturing purposes.

How far diversion permissible.

850. An upper riparian owner, though he sustains no injury in respect of the quantity of water which flows from his land by the abstraction of a lower owner, may yet complain thereof, if the abstraction has the effect of preventing fish from ascending to his waters (h).

A lower riparian owner may not do anything to obstruct the passage of fish which is not essentially necessary to enable him to exercise his right of catching fish in their passage up the river (i).

851. In the ordinary course of mining a mine-owner may draw the subterranean percolating water from his neighbour's land, but he must not so work his mines as to drain off the water flowing in a defined channel on his neighbour's land (k).

852. In the course of using water for manufacturing purposes it often happens that an appreciable quantity is lost, with the result that the lower riparian owner does not receive the quantity of water to which he as such owner is entitled. If, to obviate this, the manufacturer turns into the stream before it leaves his land water obtained from other sources to compensate for the water lost by the manufacturing process, thus giving the lower riparian owner the quantity he is entitled to, this is no defence to an action by such owner, for he is entitled to have the natural water of the stream, and is not bound to receive foreign water, since he cannot object to a stoppage or obstruction of the foreign supply of water (l).

853. Every riparian owner may divert the water of a stream for purposes in connexion with his land, or for other purposes (m); but he is bound to return the water which he has diverted into the stream again before it leaves his land substantially undiminished

A.; Brymbo Water Co. v. Lesters Lime Co. (1894), 8 R. 329. Where an upper riparian owner alleges that he has increased the flow of a spring by artificial means, the water from which ought to flow to a lower owner, the burden of proof of the increased flow is on the upper owner (Borough of Portsmouth Waterworks Co. v. London, Brighton and South Coast Rail. Co. (1909), 73 J. P. (Journal) 624).

(m) Miner v. Gilmour (1858), 12 Moo. P. C. C. 131; Nuttall v. Brucewell (1866), L. R. 2 Exch. 1 (grant to a non-riparian owner of a flow of water to his mill; such grantee can recover damages against an upper riparian owner who has interfered with the flow); *Kensit v. in volume and unaltered in character (n); for a lower riparian owner, subject to the rights of an upper owner, is entitled to have the water flowing in the natural bed of the stream come to him unaltered in quality and quantity, and to come to his land in its ordinary and accustomed channel (o).

SECT. 1.
Water Flowing in a Known
Channel.

An upper riparian owner must not enlarge the channel so as to prejudice a lower owner (p).

854. A riparian owner who diverts water altogether from a stream can be restrained without proof of actual damage, because his acts if continued long enough would crystallise into a right (q), and it is no defence that in place of the diverted water he has substituted an equal quantity of water from another source (r).

Restraining diversion.

(iv.) Obstruction.

855. Every riparian owner may build an erection on his land though covered with water, provided that it does not interfere with the rights of navigation, or the rights of other riparian owners (s).

right.

In this respect it is not necessary for the other riparian owner to prove actual or prospective damage; the mere fact that his common law rights are infringed is sufficient to entitle him to have the obstruction removed (t); for the bed of a stream must be preserved from all obstructions which can by reasonable possibility produce injury to any of the riparian owners (a).

856. Subject to this condition of non-interference with the rights of upper or lower riparian owners, a riparian owner may even dam up the stream for the purposes of his mill (b), for he has Dams.

The right to have a dam across a river may be acquired in private waters by grant from other riparian owners or by enjoyment, in short, by any means by which such rights may be constituted (Rolle v. Whyte (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 286, per COCKBURN, C.J., at p. 302). A licence to erect a dam at one spot will an interest in the power which is to be derived from flowing water (c); but he must not thereby raise the level of the water as it flows past riparian lands above (d). The conversion by a riparian owner of a stream into a pond by placing a dam across it does not give him as owner of the dam an exclusive right to use the whole of the water, for he is bound to pass the water on to the lower riparian owners (e).

Injury to upper owner.

857. Obstructions must not be erected in a stream so as to throw back the water on to the lands of an upper riparian owner and thereby flood his lands or injure his mill, for each owner is entitled to have the water go from his lands in the ordinary course of nature (f); but a right to do this may be acquired as an easement (g).

Natural
obstruction.

858. When an obstruction is a natural one, or formed by long natural accumulation, it must not be removed, if by so doing an injury would be inflicted on a lower riparian owner (h).

SECT. 2.—Water Flowing in an Unknown Channel.

Channel
known and defined.

859. Water flowing underground in a known and defined channel is subject to the same rules of law as water flowing on the surface in a known channel (i).

Percolating
water.

860. Where the underground water flows in a defined but unknown channel (k), or merely percolates or flows through the soil, the law as to the rights of riparian owners does not apply. The owner of land containing underground water which percolates or flows by unknown channels to a neighbour's land may divert or appropriate it as he pleases, so that his neighbour may have no underground water in his land, or so that the stream that he owns may be diminished in consequence of the underground water which not authorise its erection at another spot, so as to prevent the licensor from treating it as an obstruction (Mason v. Hill (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 1).

(g) Where such a right has been acquired the miller may keep his mill wheels in repair, and so continue the easement (Alder v. Sarill (1814), 5 Taunt. 454).

has been so appropriated not coming into his stream (l). This right of diversion, or appropriation, may be exercised whatever the motive may be, and it matters not how long his neighbour has enjoyed the use of the percolating (a) water, for the neighbour thereby acquires no rights in law, because water in an unknown channel or percolating water cannot be the subject of prescription or grant (b). Consequently any person may by drainage or other works on his own land drain his neighbour's well, for this is a case of damnum absque injuriâ (c).

Water Flowing in an Unknown
Channel.

Similarly, if in the course of draining the water from under his neighbour's land he dissolves salt rock or other soluble matter therein, so that the water comes to the surface impregnated therewith, he commits no actionable wrong (d).

On the other hand, the owner of land under which there is subterranean water not in a defined or known channel has no right at common law to the support of such water (e), and his neighbour may draw off such water as and when he pleases (f), but he must take care that in so doing he does not draw off his neighbour's land the waters flowing there in a known channel (g) or any insoluble substance forming a support to the surface (h).

861. Where the underground water flows in a defined channel, but the course of the channel is not known and cannot be ascertained except by excavation, it is in the same position as water percolating through the soil, and may be abstracted by the owner of the soil or by his neighbours (i). Channel unknown.

Channel.

Surface
water.

Meaning of
"pollution."

Percolating
water.

862. The owner of land has an unqualified right to appropriate or drain mere casual surface water, not flowing in a regular or definite course, for agricultural purposes (k), and a neighbour cannot complain that it does not come to his land (l).

SECT. 3.—Purity and Pollution.

SUB-SECT. 1.—In General.

863. By pollution is meant the addition of something which changes the natural qualities of the water (m).

It makes no difference in law whether the polluted water flows in a known or unknown channel, or trickles over the surface of the land, or percolates through the soil (n), or flows through an artificial channel of a permanent character (o).

864. Water flowing in an unknown channel or percolating through the ground must not be polluted, and no right to do so can be acquired by prescription, for the principle of law sic utere tuo ut alienum non lœdas applies, and a landowner who puts poisonous matter on his land must take care that it does not escape so as to injure the water of a person who is entitled to use it (p).

terminus ad quem, and the owners of land between the two and their riparian neighbours can fairly be presumed to know the existence and course of the stream (Bradford Corporation v. Ferrand, [1902] 2 Ch. 655, 665; Dickinson v. Grand Junction Canal Co. (1852), 7 Exch. 282, 300); compare Blackrod Urban District Council v. Crankshaw (John) Co., Ltd. (1913), 136 L. T. Jo. 239.

Discharging sewage and pure effluent in such quantities as to make the stream as a whole purer amounts to pollution if at the place where the sewage enters the stream there is in fact pollution (A.-G. v. Birmingham, Tame, and Rea District Drainage Board, [1908] 2 Ch. 551, varied without affecting this point, [1912] A. C. 788); so does the addition of two substances each in themselves harmless, but when in conjunction causing pollution (Blair and Sumner v. Deakin (1887), 57 L. T. 522, 525).

(n) See the text, infra.

Whether the owners of land abutting on an artificial channel of a temporary nature can object to pollution is doubtful; compare Wood v. Waud (1849), 3 Exch. 748; Laing v. Whaley (1850), 3 H. & N. 675, Ex. Ch.; Wood v. Sutcliffe (1851), 2 Sim. (N. S.) 163; and see titles SEWERS AND DRAINS, Vol. XXV., p. 781; WATER SUPPLY, pp. 297 et seq., ante.

Pollution.

865. The pollution of water to the danger of the health or lives of the public is an indictable nuisance (q), and one against which the public may be protected by proceedings by or in the name of the Attorney-General (r).

Where the Attorney-General proceeds he need not prove actual injury to the public (s).

He may proceed on the relation of any person, whether residing near the nuisance or not, or whether or not he is interested in any property affected (t).

866. Where a statute prohibits the discharge of sewage or polluted water into a stream so as to prejudicially affect the purity of the stream, it is no defence to allege that besides such discharge the defendants at another point have discharged other effluents of a pure character, so that in the aggregate the quality of the water in the stream as a whole is improved (u), though it is a defence to prove that the discharge does not make the stream fouler than it was before (a).

On any indictment or other proceeding for a nuisance to a public river or on any other indictment or proceeding instituted for the purpose of trying or enforcing a civil right only, the defendant and the wife or husband of a defendant are admissible witnesses and compellable to give evidence (Evidence Act, 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. 14), s. 1).

SECT. 3.

Purity and Pollution.Rights of riparian owners.(ii.) As Regards Private Owners.

867. A person has at common law no right to pollute water so that in a polluted state it passes to the land of another person who has the right to receive the water (b), or passes into tidal water (c); for it is a natural right of property to have water flow to one's property undisturbed and in its natural state (d), and a landowner may not use his land so as to be a nuisance to his neighbour (e). This right is in no way connected with the ownership of the bed of natural watercourses, but is a right attaching to the riparian land (f).

How far
pollution
permissible.

868. A person may pollute water on his own land so long as it is freed from pollution when it leaves his land (g), or only flows to the land of a person who has no right in law to complain of the pollution (h). Similarly, a person who stores polluting matter on his land or in his sewer must see that it does not escape to the injury of others, and mere neglect of this duty gives a good cause of action to any person injured (i).

The right to pollute water may be gained by grant, prescription, or Act of Parliament (k).

(b) Magor v. Chadwick (1840), 11 Ad. & El. 571. When water from an artificial channel for draining mines has been enjoyed in a pure state for twenty years, the mining cannot be resumed so as to pollute the channel (Cawkwell v. Russell (1856), 26 L. J. (Ex.) 34).

(c) Neither at common law nor under the Public Health Acts, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) and 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), can sewage be discharged into the sea so as to cause a nuisance to another (Foster v. Warblington Urban Council, [1906] 1 K. B. 648, 665, C. A.; Hobart v. Southend-on-Sea Corporation (1906), 75 L. J. (K. B.) 305; Owen v. Faversham Corporation (1908), 73 J. P. 33, C. A.). As to the statutory prohibition of pollution of the sea, see also pp. 438, note (u), 442, 446, 447, post.

A.; such as, for instance, a non riparian owner who has only acquired a right to take the water by leave of the riparian owner (Ferguson v. Malvern Urban District Council (1908) 72 J. P. 101), or a householder who uses a supply of water to which he has no proprietary right or lease or licence; compare Laing v. Whaley (1850), 3 H. & N. 675, Ex. Ch.

(i) Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council, supra, applying Fletcher v. Rylands (1868), L. R. 3 H. L. 330. The same principle also applies to the neglect of a local authority to prevent sewage escaping from their sewers though the inhabitants of the district have a statutory right to send their sewage into the sewer (Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council, supra).

(k) Wright v. Williams (1836), 1 M. & W. 77; Gaved v. Martyn (1865) 19 C. B. (N. S.) 732; and see title EASEMENTS AND PROFITS À PRENDRE Vol. XI., pp. 256 et seq.; p. 452, post. As to the commencement of prescriptive right, compare Murgatroyd v. Robinson (1857), 7 E. & B. 391. A riparian owner who has acquired a prescriptive right to pollute has no right to increase the pollution (McIntyre Brothers v. McGavin, [1893] A. C. 268).

SUB-SECT. 3.—Remedies for Pollution.(i.) Damages and Injunction.

SECT. 3.

Purity and Pollution.Cause of action.

869. When water is polluted it is not necessary that the person who has the right to complain of the pollution should prove that he has suffered actual damage before the courts will interfere to protect him. It is sufficient to prove that his right to have the water flow to him in its natural state has been infringed (l).

870. The party (m) whose right is infringed can bring an action for an injunction and damages (n) except where the pollution is caused by the nonfeasance of certain local authorities (o).

Remedies.

When actual damage is caused the court either assesses the amount thereof or else orders an inquiry as to damages (p).

871. It is no defence to an action for polluting water that the water is also fouled by other persons (q), or that the plaintiff is plaintiff.

(l) Crossley & Sons, Ltd. v. Lightowler (1867), 2 Ch. App. 478; Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co. (1877), 5 Ch. D. 769; Cloves v. Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Co. (1872), 8 Ch. App. 125; Jones v. Llannwrst Urban Council, [1911] 1 Ch. 393. A riparian owner has no right of action against another who by legitimate exercise of his rights of drainage prevents him from making a particular use of the stream, as, for instance, for growing watercress (Weeks v. Heward (1862), 10 W. R. 557).

(m) This includes an owner in fee or in reversion or a lessee (Jones v. Llannwrst Urban Council, supra; Fitzgerald v. Firbank, [1897] 2 Ch. 96, C. A.; Wood v. High and Low Harrogate Improvement Commissioners (1874), 22 W. R. 763).

(n) A.-G. v. Hackney Local Board (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 626; A.-G. v. Basingstoke Corporation (1876), 24 W. R. 817. An injunction is not granted where no injury is shown (Elmhirst v. Spencer (1849), 2 Mac. & G. 45; A.-G. v. Gee (1870), L. R. 10 Eq. 131), nor where the nuisance is trifling and does not justify it (A.-G. v. Cockermouth Local Board (1874), L. But it is not necessary to prove actual damage (Jones v. Llannwrst Urban Council, supra; and see Oldaker v. Hunt (1855), 6 De G. M. & G. 376, C. A.; *Spokes v. In the order for injunction it is proper to insert the words "to the injury of the plaintiff" (Lingwood v. Stowmarket Co. (1865), L. R. 1 Eq. 77). As to breach of an undertaking not to allow any further pollution till after trial of the action, see Marsden (Charles) & Sons, Ltd. v. Old Silkstone Collieries, Ltd. (1914), 78 J. P. not in fact making use of the water and had bought the riparian land knowing the water was polluted (r), or that he has stood by and allowed money to be expended on works which may cause pollution if they are not properly constructed as required by statute, since the mere prospect of injury does not give any right to relief, as it is assumed that the statute will be complied with (s).

Prospective injury.

872. Although prospective injury may not be ground for an injunction, yet if there is some pollution in fact the court takes into account its probable continuance and increase (t).

When
granted.

873. Whether damage is caused or not, the court grants an injunction for any infringement of the natural right to water by pollution, for to grant damages in lieu of an injunction would only be to compensate for past injuries, and as new modes of enjoyment of the water may arise, which it is impossible to foresee, it is equally impossible to estimate the compensation for any damage thereto (a).

It is no answer to a claim for an injunction that, if granted, a large body of workmen will be thrown out of employment (b), or that a large body of the public will be inconvenienced thereby (c), or that the effect of the injunction will be to deprive entirely the wrongdoers of some rights to pollute which they have acquired by prescription (d), or that the defendant does not in fact cause the pollution, but only contributes to the water something which, when mingled with something put into the water by another person, causes the pollution (e).

Pollution
from sewer.

874. When the pollution is caused by the outflow from a sewer vested in a local authority by Parliament into which persons have a right to drain, the court only restrains the authority from authorising and directing sewage to flow and not from permitting it to flow from the sewer (f).

The court will not grant an injunction against a local authority where persons have a right to discharge into the sewers and that authority is taking steps to remedy the nuisance (g), but the court will grant an injunction if it appears that the effect of the injunction will not cause any interference with such rights of drainage (h).

In granting injunctions to restrain pollution by sewage it is the practice to restrain immediately any new connexions and to suspend the operation of the order for a time to enable the defendant to alter the works so as to comply with the order of the court (i). If, however, the removal of the injury is physically impossible the court will not grant an injunction, but will leave the plaintiff to his remedy in damages (k).

875. When the defendant after an injunction has been obtained against him has taken the necessary steps to remedy the prohibited nuisance so that the plaintiff no longer suffers damage, the court may dissolve the injunction (l).

(ii.) Other Remedies.

876. If the pollution is by sewage from the sewer of a local authority, which has only been given a limited ownership of the sewer by statute, through their neglect of duty and not by their misfeasance, a person injured thereby has no remedy except by mandamus (m), though if due to misfeasance, then he has a remedy by injunction or damages, according to the circumstances of the Mandamus.

Refuse.

877. To prevent the pollution (p) of rivers, and in particular to prevent the establishment of new sources of pollution (q), the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (r), made it an offence for any person (s) to put, cause to be put or to fall, or knowingly permit (t) to be put or to fall, or to be carried into any stream (u), the solid

(p) This does not include innocuous discoloration (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 20).

(q) Ibid., preamble. The Act does not apply to or affect the lawful exercise of any rights of impounding or diverting water (ibid., s. 17; River Ribble Joint Committee v. Halliwell. Same v. Shorrock, [1899] 2 Q. B. 385, C. A.). Though the Act did not prejudice or affect any other rights or powers then existing or vested in any person by Act of Parliament, law or custom (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 16), the right to continue to pollute is not preserved, nor the right to abate a nuisance destroyed (Midlothian County Council v. Pumphreston Oil Co. (1904), 6 F. (1st of Sess.) 387). The obvious policy and the obvious effect of the Act is to stop the pouring of foul water into a stream except in particular circumstances (Airdrie Magistrates v. Lanark County Council, Coalbridge Magistrates v. Lanark County Council, [1910] A. C. 288, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 290). The Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), and the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 31), may (ibid., s. 2) be cited together as the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893.

(r) 39 & 40 Vict. c. 75, s. 2.

(s) This includes a corporation, and, therefore, a sanitary authority (ibid., s. 20).

(t) As to the meaning of "knowingly permits," compare Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 31), s. 1; Yorkshire West Riding Council v. Holmfirth Urban Sanitary Authority, [1894] 2 Q. B. 842, C. A.

(u) This includes such part of the sea and tidal water as may be determined by the Local Government Board, by Order in the London Gazette, and, save as aforesaid, includes rivers, streams, canals, lakes and watercourses, other than those mainly used as sewers on the 15th August, 1876, and emptying into the part of the sea or tidal waters not determined by the Local Government Board to be streams (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 20). Whether a particular channel is a sewer or stream is a question of evidence; see West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Preston & Sons (1904), 69 J. P. 1; West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Yorkshire Indigo, Scarlet and Colour Dyers, Ltd. (1902), 67 J. P. 80; West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Gaunt & Sons (1902), 67 J. P. 183; Airdrie Magistrates v. Lanark County Council, Coalbridge Magistrates v. Lanark County Council, supra, where certain "burns" were held to be "streams," and not "watercourses mainly used as sewers." As to the distinction between "streams" and "percolating water," see M'Nab v. Robertson, [1897] A. C. 129. "Tidal water" includes waters where there is a vertical rise and fall caused by the ordinary tides (West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Tadcaster Rural District Council (1907), 97 L. T. 436, Div. Ct.; Calcraft v. Guest (1897), cited in Stuart Moore, History and Law of Fisheries, p. 102). As to pollution of fisheries, and the Thames, see pp. 448 et seq.

refuse of any manufactory, manufacturing process, or quarry, or any rubbish or cinders, or any other waste, or any putrid solid matter (a), so as either singly or in combination with other similar acts of the same or any other person to interfere with the due flow of the stream or to pollute its waters (b).

SECT. 3.
Purity and Pollution.

878. It is also an offence to cause to fall or flow, or knowingly to permit to fall or flow, or to be carried (c) into any stream, any solid or liquid sewage, except when this is by means of a channel used, constructed, or in process of construction on the 15th August, 1876 (d), for the purpose of conveying sewage matter, and the person carrying and knowingly permitting the sewage so to fall or flow or be carried proves that he is using the best practicable and available means (e) to render the sewage harmless, or in the case of a person other than a sanitary authority that he is sending the sewage along a drain communicating with a sewer (f) belonging to or under the control of a sanitary authority and with the sanction of the authority (g).

Sewage

When the sewage gets into a stream after passing along a channel vested in a sanitary authority, the authority is deemed knowingly to permit the sewage so to fall, flow or be carried into the stream within the meaning of the statutory provision (h).

(a) Putrid solid matter does not include particles of matter in suspension in water (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 20). Thus, putrid solid matter or sludge deposited by settlement in a pond or settling tank when washed into a river with a large volume of water is not solid matter, but matter suspended in water (River Ribble Joint Committee v. Halliwell, Same v. Shorrocks, [1899] 2 Q. B. 385, C. A. ; West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Rawsons (1903), 67 J. P. 407).

(b) In proving interference or pollution, evidence may be given of repeated acts which together cause such interference or pollution, though each act by itself be not sufficient for the purpose (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 2). In ascertaining whether pollution has occurred the amount of pollution already in the water is not considered, but if the minimum of which the law will not take notice is exceeded an offence has been committed (Staffordshire County Council v. Seisdon Rural District Council (1907), 71 J. P. 185).

(c) Butterworth v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board, [1909] A. C. 45, per Lord LOREBURN, L.C., at p. 49. This refers not merely to a direct discharge, but also to a discharge through some intermediate conduit, whether that is or is not a sewer under the control of a sanitary authority.

(d) This exception does not apply to a new channel constructed in substitution for an old one, and having its outfall at the same spot (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 3, 4).

(e) Local Government Board inspectors can grant certificates that the means used are the best or only practicable or available means. These are conclusive of the fact, are of force for two years, and may be renewed (ibid., s. 12).

(f) A stream from which water has been cut off may be a sewer, but the mere fact that for many years it has been polluted is not sufficient to turn it into a sewer (West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Gaunt & Sons (1902), 67 J. P. 183 ; West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Preston & Sons (1904), 69 J. P. 1 ; West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Yorkshire Indigo, Scarlet and Colour Dyers, Ltd. (1902), 67 J. P. 88 ; see Airdrie Magistrates v. Lanark County Council, Coatbridge Magistrates v. Lanark County Council, [1910] A. C. 286, where Lord HALSBURY, at p. 291, said that West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Gaunt & Sons, supra, appeared to him to have been perfectly rightly decided).

Proceedings.

879. It is an offence to cause to fall or flow, or knowingly to permit to fall or flow, or to be carried into any stream, any poisonous, noxious, or polluting liquid from any factory or manufacturing process, unless the liquid is carried into a stream along a channel used, constructed or in course of construction on the 15th August, 1876, or in a new channel constructed in substitution therefor, and having its outfall at the same spot, and the best practicable and reasonably available means to render the liquid harmless are used (i).

880. Similarly, it is an offence to cause to fall or flow, or knowingly permit to fall or flow, or to be carried into a stream solid matter in such quantities as prejudicially to interfere with its due flow, or any poisonous, noxious, or polluting solid or liquid matter from a mine other than water in the same condition as that in which it has been drained or raised from the mine, unless in the case of poisonous, noxious or polluting matter the best practicable and reasonably available means to render that matter harmless are used (j).

881. Proceedings may be taken by any person aggrieved (k) except in respect of manufacturing and mining pollution, which may only be taken by a sanitary authority (l) with the consent or on the direction of the Local Government Board. In giving or withholding consent the Board must have regard to the industrial interest involved and to the circumstances and requirements of the

s. 1: Yorkshire West Riding Council v. Holmfirth Urban Sanitary Authority, [1894] 2 Q. B. 842, C. A. (the fact that the authority has not materially altered the nature of the sewers, and has done nothing to increase the flow of sewage into the stream, is no defence); compare Rockford Rural Council v. Port of London Authority, [1914] 2 K. B. 916.

(i) Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 4. The discharge of manufacturing effluent into a sewer communicating with a river without the consent of the sanitary authority is an offence within this provision, and it is doubtful whether such consent would be a defence (West Riding Rivers Board v. Butterworth and Roberts (1907), 71 J. P. 516). Proof of a prescriptive right to pollute at the passing of the Act is no defence (Butterworth v. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board, [1909] A. C. 45; Kirkheaton District Local Board v. Ainley, Sons & Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 274, C. A.).

(k) Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 8. Within the area of the Lee Conservancy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. cliv.) the authority to take proceedings is the Lee Conservancy Board (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 9).

(l) This includes a county council. On the application of county councils the Local Government Board may, by provisional order, constitute a joint committee or other body representing the administrative counties through which a river runs, and confer on the body the powers of a sanitary authority (Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 14). The following local Acts conferring these powers have been passed: Mersey and Irwell Joint Committee Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. cxc.); West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxvi.); Rivers Pollution Prevention (Border Councils) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 34). The proceedings must be against the person whose factory or manufacturing process is producing the liquid and not the sanitary authority through whose sewers the liquid flows (West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Linthwaite Urban Council, [1914] 2 K. B. 13).

locality, and may not consent when the district is the seat of a manufacturing industry unless satisfied after due inquiry that means for rendering harmless the liquids are reasonably practicable and available in all the circumstances of the case, and that no material injury will be inflicted on the interests of such industry (m).

SECT. 3.
Purity and Pollution.

882. Every sanitary or other local authority having sewers under its control must give facilities to manufacturers to carry the liquids proceeding from their factories or manufacturing processes into the sewers so long as such liquid would not prejudicially affect the sewers or the disposal by sale, application to land, or otherwise of the sewage in such sewers, or from its temperature or otherwise be injurious from a sanitary point of view (n); but the sanitary authority need not give such facilities when its sewers and the works for purifying the sewage are only sufficient for the requirements of its district, or where such facilities would interfere with any order of a court respecting the sewage of the authority. A local authority or any urban or rural sanitary authority empowered or required by Parliament to carry sewage into the sea or tidal water may do so without offending against the statutory provisions (o).

sanitary
authorities.

883. Offences against the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893 (p), may be stopped by a summary order of the county court, and if the order is not obeyed the offender is liable to a penalty not exceeding £50 a day for every day he is in default, and, if the default continues for a longer period than a month or such less period as the court may order, to the expenses of any person appointed by the court to abate the nuisance (q).

Powers of county court.

(m) Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 6. The sanitary authority must give two months' notice of intention to take proceedings (ibid., s. 13). The notice cannot be given till after the consent of the Local Government Board is obtained (West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Robinson Brothers, [1907] 1 K. B. 431, C. A., overruling West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Scurr Fgd Mill Co. (1901), 65 J. P. 776, and following Midlothian County Council v. Oakbank Oil Co., Ltd. (1903), 5 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 700). It is not necessary to give notice of intention to take proceedings to enforce penalties for non-compliance with the order of a county court (West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Heckmondwike Urban District Council, [1914] W. N. 147). A person against whom proceedings are proposed to be taken may object before the sanitary authority, and must be given an opportunity of being heard by that authority before proceedings are taken against him (Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), s. 6).

(n) Ibid., s. 7; Brook v. Meltham Urban Council, [1909] A. C. 438. A sanitary authority must not cut off a drain from a factory unless it can show that any of the above exceptions apply (Eastwood Brothers, Ltd. v. Honley Urban Council, [1901] 1 Ch. 645, C. A.).

Proceedings may be removed from the county court to the High Court on points of law or on the merits (ibid., s. 11); West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Ravensthorpe Urban District Council (1907), 71 J. P. 209). The proceedings are not criminal or penal, and interrogatories may be administered (Re Derbyshire County Council and Derby Corporation, [1896] 2 Q. B.

SECT. 3.

Purity and Pollution.Pollution from vessels.Pollution from shore.Waterworks
Clauses Acts,
1847 and
1863.(ii.) Pollution of Harbours.

884. It is an offence to cast or unlade filth out of any vessel in a haven, road, channel or river flowing or running into a port town or city, borough or town except on the land above full sea mark (r); similar provisions are contained in the Harbours Act, 1745 (s).

885. The Harbours Act, 1814 (t), though passed ostensibly for the protection of navigation, does, if enforced, indirectly prevent pollution, as it forbids the introduction of filth into harbours or tidal navigable rivers, or the placing of filth in any position where it may be liable to be washed into the sea or into any harbour or tidal navigable river either by ordinary or high tides or by storms or land floods (a).

(iii.) Pollution by Gas.

886. Every person making or supplying gas within the statutory district of a water company to which the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863 (b), apply, who causes or suffers to be brought or to flow into any water of the water company or into any drain communicating therewith any washing or other substance produced in making or supplying gas, or who wilfully does any act connected with the making or supplying of gas whereby such water is fouled, is liable to forfeit to the water company the sum of £200 with full costs (c).

297, C. A.). When a sanitary authority is itself the offender and seeking to avoid its duties under the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), the county court judge may exercise his discretion and may refuse to make any order against a defendant who is also an offender against this Act (Kirkheaton District Local Board v. Ainley, Sons & Co., [1892] 2 Q. B. 274, C. A.); but the court should not refrain from making an order on the ground that the stream is already so polluted that the pollution from the sewer is hardly appreciated (Staffordshire County Council v. Seisdon Rural District Council (1907), 71 J. P. 185).

(r) Stat. (1542-3) 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 9. The penalty for each offence is £5 (ibid.).

(s) 19 Geo. 2, c. 22. It is an offence under this Act to unload filth into a hopper barge with intent to deposit it in the sea and not on land (Brucklesbank v. Smith (1758), 2 Burr. 656).

(t) 54 Geo. 3, c. 159, ss. 11, 12, 13. This Act does not apply to materials used for repairing wharves, sea banks etc., or to any material for repairing a highway (ibid., s. 11).

(u) The penalty is a sum not exceeding £10 over and besides all expenses incurred in removing to a proper place filth deposited contrary to the Act (ibid., s. 11). It is an offence under this Act to discharge solid matter in suspension through a drain into a tidal brook, so that it flows into a navigable river and is there deposited (United Alkali Co. v. Simpson, [1894] 2 Q. B. 116).

(b) 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93; see title WATER SUPPLY, pp. 274 et seq., ante; as to the similar provisions against pollution by gas contained in the Lighting and Watching Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 90), ss. 48-54, and in the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), ss. 21-29, see title GAS, Vol. XV., pp. 329, 360 et seq. As to the protection of a water supply against fouling generally, see title WATER SUPPLY, pp. 297 et seq., ante.

(c) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 62. The penalty must be sued for in the High Court and during continuance of the offence, or within six months after it has ceased (ibid., s. 63).

If the water supplied by the company is fouled by gas, the person making or supplying the gas is liable to forfeit to the water company a sum not exceeding £20, and a further sum not exceeding £10 for every day the offence continues after twenty-four hours after he has received notice of the offence (d).

SECT. 3.
Purity and Pollution.

(iv.) Pollution in Sanitary Districts.

887. A local authority to which the Public Health Act, 1875 (e), applies (f), though endowed by this Act with powers for the acquisition, maintenance, and making of sewers, is not empowered to make or use any sewer, drain, or outfall for the purpose of conveying sewage or filthy water into any natural stream or watercourse, or into any canal, pond, or lake until such sewage or filthy water is freed from all excrementitious or other foul or noxious matter such as would affect or deteriorate the purity and quality of the water (g), and if the authority does so, it is liable to be enjoined at the suit of any person having a right of property in respect of such water (h).

Pollution by sewage.

888. It is the duty of a local authority, with the sanction of the Attorney-General, either in its own name or in the name of any Pollution of watercourse.

(d) Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 64. For the purpose of ascertaining if water is fouled by gas, the water company may dig up the ground and examine the gas pipes, and if it appears that the water is so fouled the offender must bear the expense of this investigation (ibid., ss. 65—67).

(e) 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55.

(f) For these authorities, see title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII, p. 372. As to the Metropolis, see pp. 445, 446, post.

(g) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 17. It is no offence to pour such sewage into a stream already polluted unless the result is to make it fouler than before (A.-G. v. Birmingham, Tame and Rea District Drainage Board, [1910] 1 Ch. 48, C. A., varied without affecting this point, [1912] A. C. 788). But it is a breach of this provision if at the point where the sewage enters the stream or watercourse its purity and quality are deteriorated, even though it be already polluted, and to discharge pure effluent into the stream at another spot whereby the purity and quality of the water as a whole are improved is no defence to an application for an injunction (A.-G. v. Birmingham, Tame and Rea District Drainage Board, [1908] 2 Ch. 551, varied without affecting this point, [1912] A. C. 788). Where in such a case the defendants have ceased to commit a breach of this section and intend to use their best endeavours to prevent any future breach, the court may discharge the injunction (A.-G. v. Birmingham, Tame and Rea District Drainage Board, [1910] 1 Ch. 48, C. A., varied without affecting this point, [1912] A. C. 788). As to the form of order in such cases, see S. C., [1912] A. C. 788. A ditch made for the sole purpose of draining surface water from land is not vested in the local authority (Sykes v. Sowerby Urban Council, [1900] 1 Q. B. 584, C. A.; Phillimore v. Walford Rural Council, [1913] 2 Ch. 434).

(h) Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council, [1911] 1 Ch. 393, distinguishing A.-G. v. Dorking Union Guardians (1882), 20 Ch. D. 595, and Glossop v. Heston and Isleworth Local Board (1879), 12 Ch. D. 102, C. A.; compare Foster v. Warblington Urban Council, [1906] 1 K. B. 648, C. A., where a local authority was restrained from turning sewage into the sea to the injury of the owner of oyster beds; Harrington (Earl) v. Derby Corporation, [1905] 1 Ch. 205; A.-G. v. Leves Corporation, [1911] 2 Ch. 495. Though the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 17, forbids the discharge of sewage or filthy water, it does not prevent the discharge of surface water charged with sand and silt (Durrant v. Branksome Urban other person consenting thereto, to take such proceedings as the authority may deem advisable for the purpose of protecting any watercourse within its jurisdiction from pollution from sewage either within or without its district (a). Whenever water belonging to or under the control of the authority is fouled by gas, or contains any washing or other substance produced in the making of gas, the authority may take proceedings to recover from the person engaged in the manufacture of the gas the sum of £200 for every such offence, and a further sum of £20 for every day the offence continues (b).

When the water fouled is not the property of the local authority, but belongs to some other person, in default of his proceeding to recover the above penalties, the authority may, after notice to him of its intention to proceed, take the necessary steps to recover the penalties (c).

Pollution of
wells etc.

889. When within the district of a local authority it is represented by any person that the water in any well, tank, or cistern, public (d) or private, or supplied from any public pump, and used, or likely to be used, for drinking or domestic purposes, or for manufacturing drinks for the use of man, is so polluted as to be injurious to health, the authority may apply to a court of summary jurisdiction for an order to remedy the same (e). The court has power to summon the owner or occupier of the premises to which the well, tank, or cistern belongs, if it is private, or in the case of a public well, tank, cistern, or pump, any person alleged in the application to be interested in the same, and to order the well, tank, cistern, or pump to be permanently or temporarily closed, or the water to be used for certain purposes only, or to make such order as the court may think requisite to prevent injury to the health of persons drinking the water. If the person on whom the order is made fails to comply with it, the court may authorise the local authority to carry out the order at the expense of the delinquent (f).

Throwing rubbish.

890. When a local authority has adopted the Public Health

Council, [1897] 2 Ch. 291, (C. A.); see also title PUBLIC HEALTH AND LOCAL ADMINISTRATION, Vol. XXIII., pp. 408, 611, 612.

(a) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 69.

(b) Ibid., s. 68. Such proceedings must be taken while the offence continues or within six months after it has ceased (ibid.). On recovering the penalty the local authority is entitled to full costs of suit (ibid.). A gas company is liable for an escape of gas washings through a crack in the floor of a tank due solely to subsidence of which the company had no knowledge (Hipkins v. Birmingham and Staffordshire Gas Light Co. (1860), 5 H. & N. 74, affirmed 6 H. & N. 250, Ex. (Ch.)).

(e) Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 70.

(f) Ibid. The court may order the water to be analysed at the cost of the local authority (ibid.). Expenses incurred by the local authority may be recovered in a summary manner from the delinquent, and where not so recoverable are treated as special expenses (ibid.). As to special expenses generally, see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 335.

Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (g), Part III., it is an offence for any person to throw or place or suffer to be thrown or placed within any river, stream, or watercourse within the district of the local authority any cinders, ashes, bricks, stone, rubbish, dust, filth, or other matter which is liable to cause annoyance (h).

SECT. 3.
Purity and
Pollution

(v.) Pollution in the Metropolis.

891. Provisions similar to those mentioned above (i), relating to the fouling of water by gas and its manufacture and the pollution of wells, are in force in the administrative county of London (k), and are enforceable by the sanitary authority (l). The sanitary authority has also power to make bye-laws for securing the cleanliness and freedom from pollution of tanks, cisterns (m) and other receptacles used for storing of water used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes or for manufacturing drink for the use of man (n).

Powers in Metropolis

892. Any person other than those engaged in the manufacture of gas who does any act whereby any fountain or pump is wilfully or maliciously damaged or who is guilty of any act or neglect whereby the water of any well, pump, or fountain used or likely to be used by man for drinking or domestic purposes or for manufacturing drink for the use of man, is polluted or fouled, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 for each offence and a further penalty not exceeding 20s. for every day the offence continues after notice is served on him by the sanitary authority in relation thereto (o).

Pollution of
wells etc.

893. Any person supplied with water in the Metropolis by the Metropolitan Water Board (p) who wilfully or negligently causes or suffers any fittings (q) used in connexion with the water supply to be out of repair or to be so used or contrived that the water supplied is or is likely to be contaminated, or so as to occasion or allow the return of foul air or other noise or impure matter into any pipe belonging to or connected with the pipes of the Board, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5. In addition he is liable to have the supply of water cut off so long as the cause of injury remains or is not remedied (r).

894. Whenever water supplied by the Metropolitan Water Board within the Metropolis (s) is contaminated or affected in any way whatsoever by the gas of a gas company, the gas company must within twenty-four hours after notice given by the secretary of the Water Board or by any person using the water, take effectual steps to prevent the gas from contaminating or affecting the water, and if within forty-eight hours after such notice, the gas company fails to use all reasonable means effectually to remove the cause of complaint and prevent all such contamination, it is liable to forfeit to the use of the Water Board a sum not exceeding £10 for each day during which the water is so affected (t).

When there is doubt whether such water is contaminated by the gas of a gas company the Water Board may, after giving twenty-four hours' notice to the gas company, open the ground and examine its gas mains, pipes and apparatus, and if it then appears that there has been an escape of gas whereby the water was contaminated, then the gas company must bear the cost of this investigation, otherwise the Water Board must do so and make good to the gas company any damage done to its property (a).

(vi.) Pollution of Fisheries.

Protection of salmon.

895. The statutes relating to fisheries have created various offences which, though aimed at the protection of fish, at the same time prevent pollution (b). Thus, it is forbidden to cause or knowingly permit to flow, or to put, or knowingly permit to be put, into any waters (c) containing salmon or into any tributaries (d) thereof, any liquid or solid matter to such an extent as to cause the water to poison or kill fish (e), unless the person who does so has acted in the exercise of a right to which he is by law entitled and proves to the satisfaction of the court before whom he is tried that he has used the best practicable means within a reasonable cost (f) to render such liquid or solid matter harmless (g).

These provisions are not to prevent anyone from acquiring a legal right in cases where he could have acquired it if they had not been enacted, or to exempt anyone from any punishment to which he would otherwise be subject, or to legalise any act or default that would but for these provisions be deemed to be a nuisance or contrary to law (g).

896. It is a misdemeanour (h) unlawfully and maliciously to put any lime or other noxious material into any fish-pond or water which is private property or in which there is any private right of fishery, or into any salmon river (i), with intent thereby to destroy any of the fish there, or that may thereafter be put there.

The verdict of the jury is conclusive in all subsequent proceedings for penalties (ibid., s. 7).

(g) Ibid., s. 5. The penalty for a breach of these provisions is: on a first conviction, not exceeding £5; on a second conviction, not less than £2 10s. and not exceeding £10, and a further penalty, not exceeding £2, for every day during which the offence is continued, but the justices need not inflict a greater penalty in the whole than £2 10s.; on a third conviction, not less than £5, and not exceeding £20 a day for every day during which such offence is continued, commencing from the date of the third conviction, but the justices need not inflict a greater penalty than £5 in the whole; on a fourth or subsequent conviction, not exceeding £20 a day for every day the offence has continued, dating from the date of the third conviction (ibid.; Salmon Fishery Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 121), s. 57; Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), s. 18 (5)).

under the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868 (m), and sufficiently marked out and known as such, it is an offence for anyone other than the owner or grantees, their agents, servants, and workmen, to deposit any ballast, rubbish, or other substance or to disturb or injure in any manner, except for a lawful purpose of navigation or anchorage, such oysters or mussels or the beds or fishery (n).

Bye-laws.

897. Local sea fisheries committees (o) have power by bye-law (p) to prohibit or regulate the deposit or discharge of any solid or liquid substance detrimental to sea fish (q) or sea fishing, but any such bye-law must not affect any power of a sanitary or other local authority to discharge sewage in pursuance of any power given by a general or local Act of Parliament or provisional order, or pre-judicially affect any right on, to or over any portion of the seashore enjoyed by any person under any local or special Act of Parliament, or any royal charter, letters patent, prescription, or immemorial usage, without his consent (r).

(vii.) Pollution of the Thames.

Duties of Thames Conservancy.

898. It is the duty of the Thames Conservancy to preserve and maintain the purity of the water of the Thames and its tributaries down to the western boundary of the County of London, and to cause these waters to be effectually scavenged of substances liable to putrefaction (s).

(m) 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45.

(n) Ibid., ss. 53, 54. The penalty is: for a first offence, not exceeding £2; for a second offence, not exceeding £5; for a third or subsequent offence, not exceeding £10; and the offender is liable to make full compensation to the owner or grantees respectively for any damage sustained (ibid., s. 53). This may be recovered from him in any court of competent jurisdiction, but not in a summary manner (ibid.). Instead of prosecuting under this Act, other proceedings may be taken (ibid., s. 65); compare Foster v. Warblington Urban Council, [1906] 1 K. B. 648. C. A.; The Bien, [1911] P. 40.

"Tributaries" means the whole and every part of any river, stream, water-course, cut, dock, canal, channel and water within the counties of Gloucester, Wilts, Oxon, Bucks, Berks, Hants, Surrey, Middlesex, Herts, Essex and Kent, and the administrative county of London, and being within the catchment area of the Thames and communicating either directly or indirectly with the Thames, except (i.) so much of such waters which first communicate either directly or indirectly with the Thames to the eastward of the western boundary of the county of London as is more than three miles from the Thames; (ii.) so much of the river Lee as is above the southern boundary stone mentioned in the Lee Conservancy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. cliv.); (iii.) all waters within the catchment area of that part of the river Lee; and (iv.) every cut, dock, and canal belonging to any dock

All proceedings under the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (t), relating to the pollution of the water of the Thames must be taken by the Conservancy and not by any other person (u).

SECT. 2.
Purity and Pollution.

899. If the Thames Conservancy fails to perform its duties with regard to the purity of the Thames or its tributaries, the Port of London Authority, the Metropolitan Water Board, the London County Council, the Corporation of London, or any local authority or water company which appears to the Local Government Board to be interested, may complain to that Board, which can then call upon the conservators for an explanation; if this is not forthcoming, or the complaint is not remedied, the Board can make such order as the circumstances require, which is binding on the conservators (v).

Enforcement of duties.

900. It is the duty of the London County Council, as successors to the Metropolitan Board of Works, to see that the sewers constructed under the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1858 (w), so far as practicable do not pass sewage into the Thames within the Metropolis. To enforce this a Secretary of State may direct such proceedings as he thinks fit (a).

Duty of London
County Council.

901. No person without lawful excuse may (1) unload, throw, or put, or cause or suffer to fall, any gravel, ballast, or any stones, earth mud, ashes, dirt, soil, or rubbish, or any refuse from gasworks or other manufactories, into the Thames or on the shore thereof, or into any tributary at any point within three miles of the Thames, or that the same will or may be carried into the Thames (b); or (2) knowingly put the same in any place where it is likely to be carried by floods or extraordinary tides into the Thames, or wilfully cause or suffer (c) any washing or other substance produced in making or supplying gas or any other offensive matter, whether solid or liquid, or other company established under the authority of Parliament at the port of London (Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 90).

(t) 57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.

(u) Ibid., s. 103. This part of this Act does not legalise or permit any nuisance or take away or prejudice or affect any remedy or right which a person would or might have had or exercised against any person polluting the water (ibid., s. 104). For carrying this part of the Act into effect, the conservators and their officers, except within the limits of the jurisdiction of the Port of London Sanitary Authority, may enter any land or premises and inspect and lay open the same. If they find no offence they must make good the damage done (ibid., s. 98). To the eastward of a line drawn across the river from the boundary line between the parishes of Teddington and Twickenham, the powers and duties of the Thames Conservancy have been transferred to the Port of London Authority (Port of London Act, 1908 (8 Edw. 7, c. 68), s. 7, Sched. V.): see p. 405, ante.

(c) "Wilfully suffer" does not include omitting to do something which might have mitigated the nuisance (High Wycombe Corporation v. River Thames Conservators (1898), 78 L. T. 463; Smith v. Barnham (1876), 34 L. T. 774).

Pollution.

to flow into the Thames, or into any tributary (d); or (3) put or allow to remain for more than forty-eight hours any heap or collection of manure, ashes, or other offensive matter, whether solid or liquid, near to or upon any bank of the Thames, so that the same will or is likely to drain, blow, or pass into the Thames or such tributary (e).

Sewage.

902. No person may open into the Thames or into any tributary any sewer, drain, pipe or channel whereby sewage or any other offensive or injurious matter, whether solid or liquid, shall or is likely to flow or pass therein, or wilfully cause or without lawful excuse suffer any sewage or matter as aforesaid to flow or pass therein, through any drain, pipe or channel not at the passing of the Act lawfully used for that purpose (f).

Whenever sewage or other matter as aforesaid flows or passes into the Thames, the conservators must give to the persons causing or suffering (g) the same to flow or pass notice (h) to discontinue the flow and passage within such time after three months as the notice may specify.

The recipient of the notice may, if he considers the time specified to be insufficient, demand of the conservators an extension, and if they refuse he may appeal to the Board of Trade, but failure to comply with the notice by discontinuing (i) the flow or passage to which the notice refer renders him liable on summary conviction

(d) Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 92 (3). (4). A constable may, for offences under ibid., s. 92 (1)—(4), arrest without warrant (ibid., s. 92). Ibid., s. 92 (4), does not apply to vessels of the port sanitary authority when within the port of London (ibid.).

(e) Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 92 (5). The penalty for any of the above offences is not exceeding £20 and a daily penalty not exceeding £10 (ibid.). These statutory provisions do not apply to places to the east of the eastern boundary of the Thames, even though the offensive matter might be washed by a flood tide into the river (Fuller v. Payne (1887), 3 T. L. R. 729).

(f) Thames Conservancy Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. clxxxvii.), s. 93. The penalty is not exceeding £100 and a daily penalty not exceeding £50 (ibid.).

(g) A local authority in which sewers which it has not constructed are vested, and into which other persons have a right to drain, cannot be convicted of causing or suffering sewage to pass, though it can be in respect of sewage from its municipal buildings connected with such sewers (Thames Conservators v. Gravesend Corporation, [1910] 1 K. B. 432; Waltham Holy Cross Urban District Council v. Lee Conservancy Board (1910), 103 L. T. 192; R. v. Staines Local Board (1888), 60 L. T. 261; compare Southall Norwood Urban District Council v. Middlesex County Council (1901), 83 L. T. 742, where under an Act in similar terms (Middlesex County Council Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. ccl.), s. 13) the defendants, as owners of a sewage farm, were held liable for an escape of sewage due to a breach of agreement by a third person by which he was permitted to send sewage to the farm).

(h) The notice must specify the sewers etc. in respect of which the complaint is made (Thames Conservators v. Chertsey Rural Sanitary Authority (1885), 1 T. L. R. 535).

(i) When an order has been made to discontinue and has been complied with, an isolated act of pollution is not necessarily an offence against this provision; compare Lee Conservancy Board v. Leyton Urban District Council (1906), 70 J. P. 318.

or indictment to a penalty not exceeding £100 and a daily penalty not exceeding £50 (k).

SMOT. 3.
Purity and Pollution.

The notice continues in force notwithstanding any temporary or partial suspension of the flow or passage, and notwithstanding any change in ownership or occupation (l).

903. Persons cutting or employing others to cut weeds, grass or other vegetation in the Thames or in any tributary must remove them at once, so as to prevent their remaining in and decaying and contaminating the water, and no person may throw or sweep any weeds, grass, or vegetation into the Thames (m).

Cutting weeds etc.

904. Vessels in the Thames above Teddington Lock must be fitted with sanitary conveniences so constructed that sewage or other offensive or injurious matter, whether solid or liquid, cannot pass into the Thames, and for this purpose the conservators may make bye-laws and may enter any such vessel and inspect the sanitary arrangements (n).

(viii.) Miscellaneous Provisions.

905. By the Cemeteries Clauses Act, 1847 (o), cemetery companies are forbidden to cause or suffer to be brought or to flow into any stream, canal, reservoir, aqueduct, pond or watering place any offensive matter from the cemetery whereby such water is fouled (p).

Clauses Act,

906. By the Land Drainage Act, 1861 (q), no person who has not a legal right to pollute may, without the consent of the Commissioners of Sewers or Drainage Board, cause any filthy or unwholesome water or washings of manufactories or mines, or any other foul or poisonous liquid, to flow into any watercourse within the jurisdiction of such Commissioners or Board (r).

On a conviction the conservators may, with the sanction of the court which tried the case, stop up the outlet of any sewer, drain, pipe or channel in respect of which the offence was committed at the expense of the delinquent, except where the sewer drains into the Thames below Teddington Lock, and is vested in a local authority which has taken or are taking all practicable means to procure the conviction of the actual offenders (ibid., s. 100).

Modes of
acquisition.

907. Every work in which acid is produced or used must be carried on in such a way that the acid does not come into contact with alkali waste or with drainage therefrom so as to cause a nuisance, and a sanitary authority, at the request of the owner of such works and at his expense, may (s) make a drain to carry off the acid to the sea or into any river or watercourse into which such acid may be carried without contravening the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (t).

908. It is an offence to throw, place, cause or suffer to be thrown or placed, into or in any river, stream, canal, navigation or other water, or into the sea within three miles of the shore, the carcase of an animal which has died of disease or been slaughtered as diseased or suspected (u).

SUB-SECT. 5.—Acquisition of Right to Pollute.

909. A right to pollute water flowing to another's property may be acquired (w) by grant from the person who is entitled to the water in its natural state, or by Act of Parliament, or by sufficient user under the Prescription Act, 1832 (x).

The right when acquired by prescription must be restricted to the limits of it when the period of prescription commenced, and any substantial increase in the amount of pollution after that time is unlawful, and the wrongdoer may be restrained by injunction even though it may cause a total prohibition of the pollution (a).

Where the right has been acquired in respect of the manufacture of a particular article or class of goods, it includes the right to use any proper materials for the manufacture of such goods so long as that does not increase the pollution (b), but it does not give the right of substituting the manufacture of articles or goods different from that in respect of which the right was acquired (c). SECT. 2.

Purity and Pollution.

910. A person may pour matter into water which by itself may not cause pollution, and other persons may do likewise, yet, if the combined effect is to cause pollution, each may be restrained by injunction (d), and it is no defence to an action to restrain pollution that others also foul the water (e). Pollution by combined acts.

911. No person can acquire a right by prescription to pollute water so as to cause injury to public health, or to any public right, such as fishery in tidal waters (f). Interference with public
right.

912. A prescriptive right to pollute, when acquired, cannot be lost by any subsequent act not amounting to a surrender, though it may be abandoned; mere non-user is in itself not sufficient to prove an intention to abandon, intention to abandon being a question of fact in each case (g). Non-user.

913. Where a riparian owner has acquired a right to pollute, if he sells any part of his riparian land he is liable to be restrained by his purchaser from polluting the water, unless he reserved in his grant a right to do so, for the right to pollute is not an easement of necessity (h). Pollution after sale.

SECT. 4.—Escape and Overflow.

914. When water escapes or overflows from land the owner of that land is not liable for the consequences, if this happens in the ordinary use of the land without any wilful act or negligence on his part (i). If, however, for his own convenience he collects water on Liability of landowner.

respect is not diminished because he has granted to a neighbour a right to use the water so collected and to regulate the flow of the water (s). The principle is the same, whether the water is on the surface or underground (t).

SECT. 4.
Escape
and Overflow.

915. Injuries caused by the escape of water due to the effect of gravitation or percolation in the proper and ordinary use and working of the land give no cause for damages (u), though the pumping of water to another's land, even when done without negligence and in the due working of a mine, renders the owner liable (a), unless he can show that his operations do not throw any burden on the land which it had not been subjected to before (b).

Percolation.

916. When water is collected and brought into houses let out in tenements, and then escapes or overflows, the person who has the possession and control of the water or the space from which the water escapes is liable for the consequences if he or his servants be guilty of negligence (c). Where water is stored in a cistern for the common benefit of several persons and its escape is not due to negligence but arises from natural causes, the owner of the cistern is not liable to any injury to the property by one of such persons (d).

SECT. 4.
Escape
and Overflow.
 Flood-water.

917. Where flood-water finds its way on to a person's land the owner of the land is not entitled to send the water on to his neighbour's land, though his doing so is solely for the purpose of protecting his own property (e), but if he so acts to ward off a common danger, and to prevent the water getting on to his land, he is not liable (f).

Statutory
 authority.

918. Where Parliament has authorised the storing of water there is no liability for damage done by its escape unless negligence can be proved (g), or the works authorised were subject to a proviso that a nuisance was not to be created thereby (h).

Repairs.

919. A person who is responsible for the safe keeping of water is entitled to enter on land to do the necessary works to keep the water within bounds (i); and where water escapes by non-repair of the watercourse the person on to whose land it flows cannot insist on its continuance (k). The person who is entitled to the watercourse can go on his neighbour's land to repair it when necessary, and can restrain him from building over the site of it, if thereby his access is materially interfered with or the repairs rendered more expensive (l).

Raising of banks.

920. A riparian owner is entitled to raise his banks from time to time as it becomes necessary, so as to confine the flood water within the banks and to prevent it overflowing his lands, provided that by so doing he does not occasion any injury to the lands or property of other persons (m).

(e) Whalley v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Rail. Co. (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 131, C. A. (cutting a railway embankment liable to injury by flood); compare Menzies v. Breadalbane (Earl) (1828), 3 Bli. (n. s.) 414, H. L.; Nield v. London and North Western Rail. Co. (1874), L. R. 10 Exch. 4 (there is no duty on the owners of a canal analogous to that on the owner of a natural watercourse not to impede the flow of water down it, though a neighbour's lands are thereby flooded).

A right to discharge flood water on to a neighbour's land, or to do acts on a neighbour's land to prevent a person's own land being flooded, may be acquired as an easement (Simpson v. Godmanchester Corporation, [1897] A. C. 696).

B. 442; (1914), 30 T. L. R. 441, C. A., following Midwood v. Manchester Corporation, [1905] 2 K. B. 597. Where the statute authorising the undertaking sets up a special tribunal for assessing damages occasioned by the undertaking, and the tribunal is in abeyance, the damages may be assessed by the court; see Bentley v. Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Rail. Co., [1891] 3 Ch. 222, C. A.; Walker v. Canal Co. (1913), 2 L. J. (County Courts Reporter) 112.

(m) Trafford v. R. (1832), 8 Bing. 204, Ex. Ch.; Ridge v. Midland Rail.

921. A provision in an Act of Parliament which requires a navigation company to maintain and keep the banks of a water-course in good and sufficient repair, and from time to time to strengthen and support the same for containing the water, so that the adjacent lands are not to be overflowed or damaged by water except in case of flood and during the continuance thereof, imposes an absolute obligation on the company to keep the adjoining land from injury (n).

SMOT. 4.
Escape
and Overflow.

Statutory duty.

922. It is an actionable nuisance for a person to allow the water from his eaves or gutters to fall on his neighbour's land or house (o), but a right to do so, being an easement, may be acquired in the same way as any other easements are acquired.

Acquisition of right.

Such a right is not lost by increasing the height of the structure from which the water drops if the burden of the servient tenement is not thereby increased (p), nor is it lost by unity of possession of the servient and dominant tenements, if it is an easement of absolute necessity (q).

Part I.—Introductory.

SECT. 1.—Statutory Regulation of Weights and Measures.

Statutory uniformity.

923. Uniformity in the use of weights and measures has been the subject of many laws since the time of Magna Charta, and the regulations now in force are comprised in the statutes noted below (a).

(a) The statutes regulating weights and measures at present in force comprise:—(1) Acts specially relating to weights and measures—namely, Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49) (repealing, inter alia, stats. (1795) 35 Geo. 4, c. 102, (1797) 37 Geo. 3, c. 143, (1815) 55 Geo. 3, c. 43, (1824) 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, (1835) 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 63, (1852) 16 & 17 Vict. c. 29, and (1854) 18 & 19 Vict. c. 72, and establishing imperial standards for the purposes of verification by comparison with local weights and measures throughout the kingdom); Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21) (providing for the verification of weighing instruments by qualified inspectors and regulating the sale of coal); Weights and Measures (Purchase) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 18) (authorising the purchase of franchises of weights and measures by county and borough councils); Weights and Measures Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 19) (relieving certain boroughs from contributing to county expenses in connexion with weights and measures); Weights and Measures (Metric System) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 46) (legalising the use of metric weights and measures in trade and establishing metric standards); Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28) (empowering the Board of Trade to make regulations with respect to the verification and stamping of weights and measures and the tests for ascertaining their accuracy and efficiency, the grant of certificates of suitability for use of appliances, and the examination of inspectors). The foregoing Acts may (ibid., s. 2) be

924. The following are some examples of terms used in measurement (b) of length, space, distance and capacity:—

"About," "thereabouts," "say about," "be the same more or less," are words of general import and of great obscurity (c). Delivery of 127 tons has been held to be in accord with a contract for "100 tons more or less" (d). On the other hand, very small margins (less than 3 per cent.) have been questioned in other cases (e), and between these limits there are numerous decisions (f). No evidence is admissible to explain the general meaning of the word "about"; that is a question of construction for the judge, but evidence is admissible to prove that, by the custom of a particular market or trade or locality, the word "about" has a special meaning (g).

"About"

cited as the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878—1904, and are so referred to in this title. (2) Acts and portions of Acts regulating the use of weights and measures in certain trades—namely, Bread Acts (London), 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. cvi.), 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37) (sale of bread in London); Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 58), s. 15 (payment of wages in mines); London Coal Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.) (sale of coal in London); Mills Act, 1796 (36 Geo. 3, c. 85) (sale of corn); Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 117 (weights and measures in factories); Sale of Gas Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 66) (sale of gas); Hay and Straw Act, 1796 (36 Geo. 3, c. 88) (sale of hay and straw in London); Hop Trade Acts, 1800 (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 81), s. 3 and 1814 (54 Geo. 3, c. 123), s. 1; Hop (Prevention of Frauds) Act, 1863 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 37), ss. 4, 5, 18 (sale of hops); Spirits Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24), ss. 3, 98, 99; Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 13), s. 4; Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 69 (sale of liquors); Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 14), ss. 21—28; Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Acts, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 27) and 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 70) (weights used in markets). The phrase "the Weights and Measures Acts," without further definition, means the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), and 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28) (ibid., s. 3), and is so used in this title.

SECT. 2.

Definition of Terms Used in
ment.

- The term "adjoining" means "absolutely contiguous, without anything between" (h), but the fact that two pieces of ground are separated by a highway does not prevent their being "adjoining" (i). The word "adjacent" has a more vague meaning (j) than "adjoining," and has been held not to include a distance of four miles (k), and in another case to include a distance of six miles (l).
- "adjoining"; The expression "in or near" is equivalent to the Latin in sive "adjacent"; juxta often used in old charters (m).
- "in or near"; The word "near" in a penal statute does not necessarily mean
 "near"; "next" or "nearest," but there must be reasonable vicinity, of which the court is to judge (n). This has no precise meaning (o). As regards distance, six, ten or even thirty-three or forty-two miles may satisfy the term if there is nothing nearer (p). But a thing which is the "nearest" is, in general, the "next," as these two words are synonymous (q).
- "as the crow flies"; Formerly distance between two places was measured by the nearest practicable road or way. Subsequently it was held that the distance, unless the contrary appeared, must be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane, that is, in popular language, "as the crow flies" (r). This view has been confirmed by statute(s), which enacts that, for the purposes of any Act passed after the 1st January, 1890, distance shall, unless a contrary intention appears, be measured in a straight line on a horizontal plane (t).

(q) As to "next" of kin, see, however, Smith v. Campbell (1815), 19 Ves. 400, where on the construction of a will a gift to "nearest" relations was held to exclude certain persons who would have benefited had the gift been to statutory "next of kin." As to how the distance in a direction not to come "nearer to" a house "than 100 yards" is to be measured, see Russel v. Gillespie (1868), 6 Macph. (Ct. of Sess.) 925.

SECT. 2.
Definition of Terms
Used in Measurement.

"Say not less than" fixes a minimum; thus, if a contract says "say not less than 100 packs," 100 packs at least must be delivered (u). "say not less than";

The term "square mile" does not necessarily mean a piece of land geometrically square, so long as it contains 640 acres (a). "square mile."

Part II.—Standards of Measure and Weight.

SECT. 1.—Imperial Standards.

925. There are two imperial standards of measure and weight, namely:—(1) the imperial standard yard for the United Kingdom, which is the only unit or standard measure of extension, from which all other measures of extension, whether lineal, superficial or solid, are ascertained (b); (2) the imperial standard pound for the United Kingdom, which is the only unit or standard of weight and of measure having reference to weight, from which all other weights and all measures having reference to weight are ascertained (c).

(b) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), ss. 4, 10, Sched. I., Part I. The instrument for determining the imperial standard yard is a solid square bar of bronze or gun metal, at each end of which is a gold plug or pin about one-tenth of an inch in diameter. Upon the surface of these pins are cut three fine lines at intervals of about one hundredth part of an inch transverse to the axis of the bar, and two lines at nearly the same interval parallel to the axis of the bar. The measure of the length of the imperial standard yard is given by the interval between the middle transversal line at one end and the middle transversal line at the other end, the point of each line which is employed being the point midway between the longitudinal lines (ibid., Sched. I., Part I.). The Board of Trade obtained a new standard of imperial measure in 1897, when it was enacted by the Weights and Measures (Metric System) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 46), s. 2, that "the standards which may be made under s. 8 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, shall include metric standards derived from the iridio-platinum linear standard metre and the iridio-platinum standard kilogram deposited with the Board of Trade and numbered 16 and 18 respectively."

Parliamentary Copies of Imperial Standards.Number of copies.SECT. 2.—Parliamentary Copies of Imperial Standards.

926. Four copies of the imperial standard of measure and four copies of the imperial standard of weight, which were constructed at the same time as the imperial standards, are denominated parliamentary copies of the imperial standards (d). The Board of Trade may, in addition, cause accurate copies of the two standards to be made, which, when approved by His Majesty in Council, are of the same effect as the parliamentary copies and are included under that denomination (e). If at any time either of the imperial standards of measure and weight is lost, or in any manner destroyed, defaced, or otherwise injured, the Board may cause it to be restored by reference to or adoption of any of the parliamentary copies of that standard (f); and in case of the loss, destruction, defacement, or injury of any of the parliamentary copies, the Board may cause it to be restored by reference either to the corresponding imperial standard or to one of the parliamentary copies of that standard (g).

SECT. 3.—*Board of Trade Standards.*Secondary standards.

927. The secondary standards of measure and weight, derived from the imperial standards and in use under the direction of the Board of Trade on the 1st January, 1879, which are specifically described in the Second Schedule of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (h), are the only secondary standards, and are called Board of Trade standards; and if any of such standards is at any time lost, or in any manner destroyed, defaced, or otherwise injured, the Board may cause it to be restored by reference either to one of the imperial standards or to one of the parliamentary copies of those standards (i).

Additional
standards.

The Board must from time to time cause to be made and duly verified such new denominations of standards, either equivalent to or multiples or aliquot parts of the imperial weights and measures, or equivalent to or multiples of each coin of the realm for the time being, as appear to the Board to be required in addition to the Board of Trade standards. These new denominations of standards when approved by an Order in Council, which must be published in the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Gazettes and laid before Parliament (k), must be accepted as Board of Trade standards, as if they Sched. I., Part I. The instrument for determining the imperial standard pound is a cylinder of platinum, 1.35 inches in height and 1.15 inches in diameter, with a groove or channel round it, the middle of which is about .34 inch below the top of the cylinder, for the insertion of the points of an ivory fork by which it is lifted. The weight in vacuo of this cylinder is the legal standard measure of weight and of measure having reference to weight (Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), Sched. I., Part I.).

SECT. 2.
Board of Trade
Standards.

Such Board of Trade standards as are equivalent to or multiples of any coin of the realm for the time being are standard weights for determining the justness of the weight and for weighing such coin (n).

SECT. 4.—Local Standards.

928. The standards of measure and weight which were legally in use by inspectors of weights and measures for the purposes of verification or inspection on the 1st January, 1879, and all copies of the Board of Trade standards which since that date have been compared with those standards and verified by the Board for the purpose of being used by inspectors for the verification and inspection of weights and measures, are denominated local standards (o).

SECT. 5.—Custody and Verification of Standards.

929. The Board of Trade is entrusted with the custody of the imperial standards of weights and measures, the Board of Trade standards, and all balances, apparatus, books, documents and things used in connexion therewith or relating thereto, which were deposited in the Standard Department, or any other office of the Board, on the 8th August, 1878 (p).

SECT. 5.

Custody and Verification
of Standards.Duties of Board of Trade.

930. The Board of Trade must:—

(1) cause the parliamentary copies, except that deposited at the New Palace at Westminster, to be compared once in every ten years with each other, and once in every twenty years with the imperial standards (r);

(2) cause the Board of Trade standards for the time being to be compared once at least in every five years with the parliamentary copies of the imperial standards and with each other, and to be adjusted or renewed if requisite (s);

(3) cause all copies of any standards submitted for the purpose by any local authority, and used or intended to be used as local standards, to be compared with the Board of Trade standards, and verified in such places as the Board may in each case direct, and, if the Board finds such local standards fit for the purpose of being used by inspectors as standards for the verification of weights and measures, cause them to be stamped as verified or reverified in such manner as to show the date of verification or of reverification; every such verification must be evidenced by an indenture and every reverification by an indorsement upon the original indenture of verification, or by a new indenture of verification; and indentures or indorsements purporting to be signed by an officer of the Board are evidence of the verification or reverification of the weights and measures referred to (t); and

(4) keep an account of all local standards verified or reverified (u).

The Board is also empowered to make general regulations with respect to the verification and stamping of weights and measures and measuring instruments and for the guidance of local authorities (w).

Duties of local authorities.

931. It is the duty of the local authority of every county and borough (a) to provide from time to time such local standards of measure and weight as the authority deems requisite for the purpose of comparison by way of verification or inspection of all weights and measures in use in its county or borough; to fix the places at which such standards shall be deposited; and to provide from time to time proper means for verifying weights and measures by comparison with the local standards, and for stamping the weights and measures so verified (b).

(a) The authorities, as regards England, are the county councils, including the London County Council (Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 40); and borough councils; as regards Scotland, the county and borough councils established under the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 50); and as regards Ireland, the county councils, the town councils of boroughs, and, in Dublin, the Metropolitan Police Commissioners (Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), Sched. IV.). As to Scotland, compare Burgh Police (Scotland) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 55), ss. 277, 416—431; as to Ireland, compare Local Government (Ireland) Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 37).

SECT. 3.
Custody
of Standards.

Verification
of local
standards.

932. Neither a local standard of weight nor a local standard of measure can be deemed legal or be used unless they have respectively been verified or reverified, in the case of a standard of weight within five and in the case of a standard of measure within ten years before the time at which they are respectively used (c). Local standards of weight or measure which have become defective in consequence of any wear or accident or have been mended cannot be accepted as legal until they have been reverified by the Board of Trade (d). Except in these cases, a local standard may be reverified by local comparison if on such local comparison it is found correct, but otherwise it must, and in any case may, be reverified by the Board of Trade (e).

Local comparison.

A local comparison of a local standard must be made by an inspector of weights and measures for the county or borough in which such standard is used by comparing it in the presence of a justice of the peace with some other local standard, which has been verified or reverified by the Board of Trade, in the case of a weight within the previous five years and in the case of a measure within the previous ten years (f). Where, upon a local comparison, the local standard is found correct, the justice must sign an indorsement upon the indenture of verification of that standard, stating the local comparison and verification, and the error (g), if any, found therein. The indorsement so signed must be transmitted to the Board of Trade to be recorded in the account of the verification of local standards; when so recorded, it is evidence of the local comparison and verification, and a statement of the record thereof, if purporting to be signed by an officer of the Board, is evidence of its having been so recorded (h).

Production of local
standards.

The local standards must be produced by the person entrusted with their custody, upon reasonable notice and upon payment by the person requiring such production of the reasonable charges for producing the same, at such reasonable time and place within the county, borough, or place for which they have been provided as any person by writing under his hand requires (i).

Part III.—Measures in Use.

SECT. 1.

Measures of Length and Area.

Measures of length.

SECT. 1.—Measures of Length and Area.

933. All measures, whether lineal, superficial, or solid, are ascertained from the imperial standard yard (k).

A foot is one third of the standard yard, and an inch is one twelfth part of a foot.

A rod, pole, or perch in length contains five and a half standard yards.

A chain contains twenty-two standard yards.

A mile contains one thousand seven hundred and sixty standard yards (l).

Measures of area.

A rood of land contains one thousand two hundred and ten square yards according to the imperial standard yard, and an acre four thousand eight hundred and forty such square yards, being one hundred and sixty square rods, poles, or perches (m).

SECT. 2.—Measures of Weight.

Measures of weight.

934. All measures having reference to weight are ascertained from the imperial standard pound (n).

An ounce is one sixteenth part of the imperial standard pound, one-sixteenth part of such ounce is a dram, and one seven thousandth part of such pound is a grain.

A stone consists of fourteen imperial standard pounds, a hundred-weight of eight such stones (o), and a ton of twenty such hundred-weights.

Four hundred and eighty grains are an ounce troy (p).

SECT. 3.—Measures of Capacity.

Measures of capacity.

The Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 10, provides that the straight line or distance between the two gold pins at the extremities of the bronze bar are to be measured when the bar is at a temperature of 62° Fahrenheit and is supported on bronze rollers placed under it in such a manner as best to avoid flexure of the bar, and to facilitate its free expansion and contraction from variations of temperature.

Ir. 284, it was held that where "forty-five acres of the lands of Dromquin, known as the house division," were devised to A., and "fifty acres of the same lands to B.," extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that the testator meant Irish and not statute acres; and that the statutory definition of "acre" in stat. (1824) 5 Geo. 4, c. 74, s. 2, has given a legal signification to the word which must be attributed to it, whether used in a will or other voluntary instrument, or in a contract. other measures of capacity, as well for liquids as for dry goods, are derived, is the gallon, containing ten imperial standard pounds weight of distilled water weighed in air against brass weights, with the water and the air at the temperature of 62° Fahrenheit and with the barometer at 30 in. (g).

SECT. 3.
Measures of Capacity.

The quart is one fourth part and the pint is one eighth part of the gallon. A peck contains two gallons, a bushel eight gallons, and a quarter contains eight and a chaldron thirty-six bushels (r).

An imperial measure of capacity must not be heaped when used, but either stricken with a round stick or roller, straight and of the same diameter from end to end, or, if the article sold cannot from its size or shape be conveniently stricken, must be filled in all parts as nearly to the level of the brim as the size and shape of the article will admit (s).

Mode of using

SECT. 4.—Compulsory Use of Imperial Measures.

936. Every contract, bargain, sale, or dealing made or had in the United Kingdom for any work, goods, wares, or merchandise, or other thing which has been or is to be done, sold, delivered, carried, or agreed for by weight or measure, is to be deemed to be made and had according to one of the imperial weights or measures or to some multiple (t) or part thereof, and if not so made or had is void (a); and all tolls and duties charged or collected according to weight and measure must be charged and collected according to one of the imperial weights or measures or to some multiple or part thereof (b).

A quarter of corn means a legal quarter of eight gallons (St. Cross Hospital (Master, etc.) v. Howard de Walden (Lord) (1795), 6 Term Rep. 338). In Lang v. Cameron (1894), 21 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 337, a contract to deliver stones of hay of twenty-four imperial pounds was held, under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), ss. 14, 19, not to be void as a transaction by imperial weight of the pound; compare North Eastern Breweries, Ltd. v. Gibson (1904), 91 L. T. 78 (false trade description under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2, of a "kilderkin" (a barrel containing less than eighteen gallons)). If goods are to be sold in a foreign country by the weights and measures of that country the contract may be made in terms of such weights and measures in the United Kingdom (Rosseler v. Cahlmann (1853), 8 Exch. 361). As to the sale of intoxicating liquors, see pp. 492, 493, post. (b) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 19, which enacts that all the contracts, bargains, sale and dealings, and the collection of tolls and duties aforesaid, are comprised under the term "trade"; see Crick v. Theobald (1895), 64 L. J. (M. C.) 216; Harris v. London County Council, [1895] 1 Q. B. 240.

Sect. 4.
Compulsory
Use of Imperial Measures.

Customary measures.
 Metric system.

Avoirdupois, troy, and apothecaries weight.

937. The use of local and customary measures and of the heaped measure is illegal; and any person selling by any denomination of weight or measure other than the imperial weights or measures or some multiple or part thereof is liable to a fine not exceeding 40s. for every offence (c).

938. Metric weights and measures may be lawfully used in trade (d). The Crown may, by Order in Council, make tables setting forth the equivalents of imperial weights and measures in terms of the metric system; and the validity of a contract or dealing is not impaired by any reference to such weights and measures, or by the use of decimal subdivisions of imperial weights and measures, whether metric or otherwise (e).

939. All articles sold by weight must be sold by avoirdupois weight (f), except (1) gold, silver, and articles made thereof, including gold and silver thread, platinum, diamonds, and other precious metals, all of which may be sold by the ounce troy or any decimal parts thereof; and (2) drugs when sold by retail, which may be sold by apothecaries weight (g).

Every person who acts in contravention of this provision is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 (h); but this liability does not extend to the sale of articles in vessels not purporting to contain an imperial measure, nor to the possession of vessels not used nor intended to be used as measures (i).

(c) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 19; but see p. 492, post. If, however, a local measure consists of so many imperial pounds a sale is not illegal though a local measure is used (Hughes v. Humphreys (1854), 3 E. & B. 954; Jones v. Giles (1854), 18 J. P. 472; Lang v. Cameron (1894), 21 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 337). As to earthen vessels as measures, see R. v. Aulton (1861), 3 E. & E. 568; as to churns used in conveyance of milk, see Harris v. London County Council, [1895] 1 Q. B. 240; Bellamy v. Great Western Dairies (1908), 98 L. T. 757. The contents of measures can only be proved by production in court (Chenier v. Watson (1797), Peake, Add. Cas. 123).

(d) Weights and Measures (Metric System) Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 46), s. 2 (2), which repeals an analogous provision in the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 18. A table setting forth the standard of the metric system in accordance with this provision was made by Order in Council of the 20th May, 1898; for the metric measures of length and capacity and metric cubic measures and metric weights, see also Weights and Measures Regulations, 1907, Tables IX.—XII.

(i) Ibid, s. 22. As to the sale of intoxicating liquors in marked measures, see Addy v. Blake (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 478; Payne v. Thomas (1890), 60 L. J. (M. C.) 3. The Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24), s. 69, enacts that every such sale of a quantity "not in cask or bottle" and not "less than half a pint" must be "in measures marked according to the imperial standards." Beer barrels have been held to be measures (Spencer v. Till (1897), Allwood, Appeal Cases under the Weights and Measures Acts, 357). The Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 24, provides a penalty on the unauthorised use of weights and measures, and under this provision consignees have been convicted for using unjust weights to check deliveries (Horder v. Roberts & Co. (1890), 44 J. P. 256).

940. Any person who prints, and any clerk of a market or other person who makes any return, price list, price current, or any journal or other paper containing any price list or price current, in which the denominations of weights and measures quoted or referred to denotes or implies a greater or less weight or measure than is denoted or implied by such denomination, is liable to a fine not exceeding 10s. for every copy of the return, price list, price current, journal or other paper published by him (k).

SECT. 4.
Compulsory
Use of Imperial Measures.
Price lists.

941. Every person using or having in his possession for use for trade any unjust (l) weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard, or weighing machine (m), or wilfully committing any fraud in the use of any weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard or weighing instrument, and every person party thereto, is liable to a fine not exceeding £5, or, in the case of a second or subsequent offence, £20, and the weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard or weighing instrument is liable to be forfeited (n). Any person wilfully or knowingly making or selling or causing to be made or sold any false or unjust measure, scale, balance, steelyard or weighing machine is liable to a fine not exceeding £50 (a).

Use of unjust
measure.

(k) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 23.

(l) Unjustness is a question of fact, and where justices have found that fact, the conviction must be affirmed (R. v. Bazendale (1880), 44 J. P. 763; Harris v. Allwood (1892), 57 J. P. 7). A loaded removable ball has been held to be no part of the scales (Carr v. Stringer (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 433). Earthen vessels used as measures are liable to seizure if unjust (Washington v. Young (1850), 5 Exch. 403). An employer cannot be convicted if a servant uses an unjust measure for his own purposes (Anglo-American Oil Co., Ltd. v. Manning, [1908] 1 K. B. 536).

Part IV.—Stamping and Verification of Weights and Measures.

SECT. 1.

Stamping with Denomination.

Where stamp is to be placed.

Verification stamp.

SECT. 1.—Stamping with Denomination.

942. The denomination of every weight, except where the small size renders it impracticable, must be stamped on the top outside, and that of every measure of length or capacity outside in legible figures and letters; and no weight or measure not in conformity with these requirements may be stamped with the stamp of verification hereinafter mentioned (b).

943. Every measure and weight whatsoever, and every weighing instrument used for trade (c), must be verified and stamped by an inspector of weights and measures with a stamp of verification (d). Every person using, or having in his possession for use, for trade any measure or weight or weighing machine not so stamped (e) is liable to a fine not exceeding £5, or in the case of a second offence £10, and to forfeit such measure, weight, or weighing machine; and any contract, bargain, or sale, or dealing made by such measure, weight, or weighing machine is void (f).

Penalties.

944. Any person forging or counterfeiting any stamp used under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (g), or under any enactment repealed thereby, for stamping any measure or weight, or wilfully increasing or diminishing a weight so stamped, or removing a stamp

(c) Compare note (b), p. 469, ante. "Weighing instrument" is defined by the Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 35, to include "scales with the weights belonging thereto, scale beams, balances, springing balances, steelyards, weighing machines and other instruments for weighing."

(d) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 28; Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 1 (1).

(e) See Starr v. Stringer (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 383, where the stamp had become obliterated, but it was held that the fact that the weight had been stamped and was just was a good defence. It is no defence to a prosecution under this provision that the local authority has not made any provision for stamping measures of a particular capacity (Hayley v. Taylor (1900), 82 L. T. 803).

(f) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 29; Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 1 (2); Robinson v. Golding (1910), 103 L. T. 248 (a milk carrier left on the doorstep of a purchaser who had ordered it an ordinary can with a lid used for delivering milk, which he had filled from the tap of a churn, and stated in reply to an inspector that he had delivered to the purchaser "a pint of milk"; the can was of the correct capacity—one pint—when the lid was closed, but was not stamped as a measure, and it was not completely filled when the inspector measured the milk, with the result that the quantity sold as a pint was deficient by half an ounce; it was held that the can was being used as a measure for trade within the meaning of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 29, and that as it was unstamped the milk carrier was liable to the penalty). As to the verification of coin weights, see title CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, Vol. VI., p. 469; and compare p. 466, ante.

from any weight or measure or weighing or measuring instrument, is liable to a fine not exceeding £50 (h); and any person knowingly using, selling, uttering, disposing of or exposing for sale any measure or weight with a forged or counterfeited stamp, or a weight so increased or diminished, is liable to a fine not exceeding £10, and all measures and weights with a forged or counterfeit stamp are forfeited (i).

SECT. 1.
Stamping with Denomination.

SECT. 2.—Verification.

945. Every weight and measure and every weighing machine used for trade must be stamped by an inspector of weights and measures appointed by the local authority, which must from time to time fix the times and places within its jurisdiction at which each inspector so appointed must attend for the purpose (k).

Inspector of weights and measures.

The inspector must attend with the local standards in his custody at such time and place as is fixed, and examine every measure or weight which is of the same denomination as one of the standards brought to him for the purpose of verification and compare it with that standard. If he finds it correct he must stamp it with a stamp of verification in such manner as best to prevent fraud, and must also stamp on measures or weights of a quarter of a pound or upwards a name, number, or mark distinguishing the district for which he acts. He must also enter in a book kept by him minutes of every such verification, and give, if required, a certificate under his hand of every such stamping (l).

Procedure.

946. An inspector appointed by the local authority for a county may enter a place within the district of an inspector appointed by any other local authority and there verify and stamp the weights and measures of any person residing within his own district; but if he knowingly stamps a weight or measure of any person residing in the district of an inspector legally appointed by another local authority he is liable to a fine not exceeding 20s. for every weight or measure which he so stamps (m).

Inspector acting outside district.

947. A weight or measure duly stamped by an inspector is a legal weight or measure throughout the United Kingdom, unless found to be false or unjust, and is not liable to be restamped because used in any place other than that in which it was originally stamped (a).

Effect of
verification.

948. The Board of Trade may, if it thinks fit, at the expense of the local authority, deposit with any inspector of weights and measures copies of any of the metric standards in the custody of

SECT. 3.—Qualifications and Appointment of Inspectors:

Appointment
of inspectors.

949. Every local authority must from time to time appoint a sufficient number of inspectors of weights and measures for safely keeping the local standards provided by such authority, and for the discharge of the other duties of inspectors under the Weights and Measures Acts (d), and may suspend or dismiss any inspector appointed by it, or appoint additional inspectors as occasion may require. The authority must give reasonable remuneration to each inspector for his duties, and may, if it thinks fit, appoint different persons to be inspectors for the verification and for the inspection respectively of weights and measures (e).

Examination
of applicants.

950. The Board of Trade provides for the holding of examinations for the purpose of ascertaining whether applicants for the post of inspector under a local authority nominated by that authority possess sufficient practical knowledge for the proper performance of the duties of an inspector of weights and measures, and for the grant of certificates to persons who satisfactorily pass such examinations; no person may be appointed as an inspector unless he has obtained such a certificate (f).

The Board may, with the consent of the Treasury, from time to time fix the fees to be charged in respect of such examinations. Such fees must be applied in such manner and to such extent as the Treasury may from time to time direct in aid of money provided by Parliament for the expenses of the Board under the Weights and Measures Acts (d), and if and as far as not so applied must be paid into the Exchequer (g).

The provisions in the Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 11 (1), (2), regulating the appointment of inspectors made after the 1st January, 1890, were extended by the Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 8, which repeals the Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 11 (1), (2). Inspectors of weights and measures must make themselves acquainted with the provisions of the Weights and Measures Acts (see note (a), p. 460, ante) and various other enactments, such as the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 58); Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22); Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 14); Markets and Fairs (Weighing of Cattle) Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 27), 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 70), incidentally connected with the subject; see Weights and Measures Regulations, 1907, Schedule (Instructions to Inspectors), instruction 3; and compare ibid., instruction 5.

951. An inspector must forthwith on his appointment enter into a recognisance to the Crown, to be sued for in a court of record, for the sum of £200 for the due performance of the duties of his office, and for the due payment at the times fixed by the local authority appointing him of all fees received by him under the Weights and Measures Acts (h), and for the safety of the local standards, stamps, and appliances for verification committed to his charge, and for their surrender immediately on his removal or other cessation from office to the person appointed by the local authority to receive them (i).

SECT. 3.
Qualifications and Appointment of Inspectors.

Recognisance.

952. An inspector may not, during the time he holds office, derive any profit from or be employed in the making, adjusting, or selling of weights, measures, or measuring or weighing instruments. Where, however, it appears desirable in any district, on the representation of the local authority, for an inspector to be allowed to adjust weights and measures and measuring and weighing machines, the Board of Trade may, if it thinks fit, authorise an inspector appointed by the local authority for that purpose, who may make such charges for any adjustment as the local authority approves, and must account for and pay any money received by him in respect of such charges as the local authority direct (h).

Prohibition against private profit.

953. Any person, not being an inspector duly appointed under the Weights and Measures Acts (h), who acts as an inspector without having obtained a certificate under those Acts is liable to a fine not exceeding £10, or in the case of a second or subsequent offence not exceeding £20 (l).

Acting without certificate.

SECT. 4.—Powers and Duties of Inspectors.

954. Every inspector (m) authorised in writing (n) under the hand of a justice of the peace, and every justice of the peace may, at all reasonable times, inspect all weights, measures, scales, balances, steelyards and weighing machines within his jurisdiction used by or in the possession (o) of any person, or on and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 8 (4). An Order of the Board of Trade of the 28th December, 1904, fixes the fee chargeable in respect of persons nominated by a local authority for the post of inspector at £1 10s.

(m) As to the special duties of inspectors with reference to the sale of coal and other commodities, see pp. 480 et seq., post.

(n) A general warrant from a justice of the peace is sufficient authority for an inspector to enter any premises without his obtaining a special warrant for the purpose, but he must, if called upon to do so, produce his warrant before he can compel the production of weights and measures or instruments (Hutchins v. Reeve (1842), 6 J. P. 313; Kershaw v. Johnson (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 329). He is not authorised to seize scales and keep them forfeit (Thomas v. Stephenson (1853), 2 E. & B. 198).

(o) See Smith v. Webb (1896), 60 J. P. 517, where it was held that a man is not necessarily in possession of the weights and measures and instruments in a shop if he has been merely left in charge of such shop during the temporary absence of his master.

SECT. 4. any premises for use for trade, and compare them with the local standards, and seize and detain any of them which are liable to be forfeited in pursuance of the Weights and Measures Acts (p). For the purpose of such inspection he may enter any place, whether a building or in the open air, whether open or enclosed, where he has reasonable cause to believe that there is any weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard, or weighing machine which he is authorised by those Acts to inspect. Any person neglecting or refusing to produce for inspection all weights, measures, scales, balances, steelyards and weighing machines in his possession or on his premises, or refusing to permit the justice or inspector to examine them, or any of them, or otherwise obstructing or hindering such justice or inspector, is liable to a fine not exceeding £5, or, in the case of a second offence, £10 (q).

Stamping of weights.

955. Any inspector who stamps a weight or measure in contravention of any of the provisions of the Weights and Measures Acts (p), or without duly verifying the same by comparison with a local standard, or is guilty of a breach of any duty imposed on him by those Acts, or otherwise misconducts himself in the execution of his office, is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for each offence (r).

Fees.

956. An inspector of weights and measures may take, in respect of the verification and stamping of weights and measures and weighing instruments, such fees as may be specified by His Majesty by Order in Council and no others, and any Order in Council made for this purpose may be varied and revoked by a subsequent Order in Council (s).

Use of tools or machinery.

957. No discount, commission, or rebate of any kind may be given nor any allowance made by an inspector or by the local authority for the use of tools, premises, machinery, or instruments, or assistance rendered for the purpose of verification of stamping, except where they take place on the premises of a glass or earthenware manufactory, in which case such adequate and reasonable allowance may be made as may be agreed upon by the local authority, with the consent of the Board of Trade (t).

Prosecution of offenders.

R. & O., 1907, p. 1140). The Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 13, is obligatory and imposes the duty of taking fees in all cases.

SECT. 4.
Powers and
Duties of Inspectors.

Part V.—Powers of the Board of Trade.

SECT. 1.—In General.

959. The Board of Trade (c) has all the powers and performs all the duties relative to standards of weight and measure, and to weighing and measuring instruments by any Act or otherwise vested in or imposed on the Treasury, or the Comptroller-General of the Exchequer, or the Warden of the Standards; and all things done by the Board or any of its officers or at its office in relation to standards of weight and measure in pursuance of the Weights and Measures Acts (a) are as valid and have the same effect and consequences as if they had been done by the Treasury or the Comptroller-General, or other officer of the Exchequer, or by the Warden of the Standards, or at the office of the Exchequer (d).

General
powers.

The Board must conduct all such comparisons, verifications, and other operations with reference to standards of weight and measure, in aid of scientific research or otherwise, as it may from time to time think expedient, and to report to Parliament on its proceedings and business under the Acts (e).

960. The Board of Trade must (f) examine and test, with reference to the material of which and the principle on which they are constructed, all patterns of weights and measures, and weighing or measuring instruments for use for trade submitted to the Board by local authorities or manufacturers or of dealers in weights, measures, or weighing or measuring instruments; and if upon examination any pattern is found not to be such as to facilitate the perpetration of fraud they must give a certificate to that effect and cause the pattern to be stamped with an appropriate mark. From and after the granting of a certificate no inspector may refuse to verify or stamp any weight or measure or weighing or measuring instrument made in accordance with the pattern on the ground that the

(a) As to these Acts, see note (a), p. 460, ante.

(b) Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 14. A similar power is vested by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7, c. 22), s. 120, in inspectors under the Factory Acts. As to the books to be kept by inspectors, the custody of standards and equipment, and their duties as regards inspection, verification and stamping, see Weights and Measures Regulations, 1907, Schedule (Instructions to Inspectors), instructions 5—63.

(c) As to the power of the Board of Trade with respect to standards and the custody and verification thereof, see pp. 465, 466, ante.

(d) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 23.

(e) Ibid. As to these Acts, see note (a), p. 460, ante.

(f) This duty is apparently enforceable by mandamus (E. v. Joint Stock Companies (Registrar) (1888), 21 Q. B. D. 131).

SECT. 1. material or principle is such as to facilitate the perpetration of fraud; but if upon examination the Board declines to give a certificate, no weight or measure or weighing or measuring instrument made in accordance with the pattern is to be deemed legal, and no inspector may verify or stamp any such weight, measure, or instrument (g).

Fees.

961. The Board of Trade may, on such examination and testing with reference to the material and principle of construction of patterns of weights, measures, and weighing or measuring instruments submitted to them, and also on the examination or testing of weighing or measuring instruments, and on the comparison and verification of weights and measures (not being standards for the use of a local authority, and not being coin weights), take such fees as may from time to time be approved by the Treasury; such fees must be applied in such manner and to such an extent as the Treasury may from time to time direct in aid of money provided by Parliament for the expenses of the Board under the Weights and Measures Acts (h), and if and as far as not so applied are to be paid into the Exchequer (i).

SECT. 2.—Making of Regulations.

Subject-matter.

962. The Board may make general regulations (k) known as the Board of Trade regulations with respect to:—(1) the verification and stamping of weights and measures, and weighing and measuring instruments, including the prohibition of stamping in cases where the nature, denomination, material, or principle of construction of the weight, measure, or instrument appears likely to facilitate the perpetration of fraud; (2) the circumstances and conditions under which and the manner in which stamps may be obliterated or defaced; (3) the tests to be applied for the purpose of ascertaining the accuracy and efficiency of weights and measures and weighing and measuring instruments; (4) the limits of error to be allowed on verification and to be tolerated either generally or as respects any trade (l); and (5) generally for the guidance of local authorities in the execution and performance of their powers and duties under the Weights and Measures Acts (h).

(g) Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 6.

(h) As to these Acts, see note (a), p. 460, ante.

(i) Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 8; Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 6.

(k) Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (4 Edw. 7, c. 28), s. 5 (1). In pursuance of this provision the Board has issued the Board of Trade Weights and Measures Regulations (Stat. R. & O., 1907, p. 1075), which take the place of all local bye-laws made under the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49) and 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), excepting bye-laws under ibid. Part II., relating to the sale of coal. The Schedule to these Regulations comprises the Instructions issued by the Board to Inspectors of Weights and Measures. As to the other powers of the Board with reference to verification etc., see pp. 465 et seq., ante.

(l) An Order in Council of the 20th December, 1907 (Stat. R. & O., 1907, p. 1134), defines the limits of error to be tolerated by local authorities.

963. Any such regulations issued by the Board of Trade may confer on local authorities power to make special regulations as respects their areas in relation to the inspection of weights and measures and weighing instruments, and to other matters which, having due regard to uniformity of administration, appear to the Board to be matters which can be better regulated by special regulations (m).

SECT. 2.
Making of Regulations.

Delegation of powers.

964. The Board of Trade regulations, which must be laid before Parliament as soon as may be after they are made, have effect as if they were enacted in the Weights and Measures Act, 1904 (n), and any inspector who refuses or wilfully neglects to act in accordance therewith is guilty of an offence under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (o), s. 49 (p).

Effect of regulations.

SECT. 3.—Determination of Differences.

965. Any difference arising between an inspector of weights and measures and any other person as to the meaning or construction of the Board of Trade regulations, or as to the method of testing or verifying any weight, measure, or weighing or measuring instrument, must, on the request of either party, be determined by the Board, whose decision is final (q).

Reference to Board of Trade.

966. The court before which any proceedings under the Weights and Measures Acts (r) are being taken must, at the request of either party, and may, without request, refer to the Board of Trade the question as to the accuracy or efficiency of any weight, measure, or weighing or measuring instrument, the accuracy or efficiency of which is in dispute, and the decision of the Board is final, any expenses incurred by the Board in making any test for the purpose being paid by the complainant or defendant as the court by order may direct (s). Such references are governed by the Board of Trade Arbitrations, etc. Act, 1874 (t).

Part VI.—Special Provisions.

SECT. 1.—Coal.

967. The Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (o), applies to all the weights, balances, scales, steelyards and weighing machines used at any mine for determining the wages payable to any person employed therein according to the weight of the mineral gotten by him in like manner as it applies to weights, balances, scales, steelyards and weighing machines used for trade (u).

Times of inspection.

968. The weights, balances, scales, steelyards and weighing machines used, or in the possession of any person for use, at any mine must be inspected and examined by an inspector of weights and measures for the district in which such mine is situated once at least in every six months, and also at any other time when he has reasonable cause to believe that any false or unjust weight, balance, scale, steelyard or weighing machine is in use. He must also inspect and examine the measures and gauges in use at the mines within his district, but his inspection and examination must not interfere with the use of those ordinarily used at the mine (v).

Powers of inspector.

For the purpose of such examination and inspection an inspector may, without any authorisation from a justice of the peace, exercise at or in any mine, as respects all weights, measures, scales, balances, steelyards and weighing machines used, or in the possession of any person for use, at or in that mine, all such powers as he could exercise, if authorised in writing by a justice of the peace, under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (a), s. 48 (b), all the provisions of which, including the liability to penalties, apply to any such inspection; but the inspector must not in fulfilling his duties impede or obstruct the working of the mine (c).

Sale of coal.

969. All coal must be sold by weight only, except where it is sold, by written consent of the purchaser, by boatload, or by wagons and tubs delivered into his works from the colliery; any person selling coal otherwise is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for every such sale (d).

Weight ticket.

970. Where any quantity of coal exceeding 2 cwts. is delivered to a purchaser the seller of the coal must, before any part of it is unloaded, deliver or cause to be delivered, or sent by post to him or his servant, a ticket or note (e) in the prescribed form (f), (u) Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 58), s. 15 (1); as to the weighing of coal generally, see title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., pp. 597 et seq.

(e) A ticket must be delivered with each cartload if more than one cartload is required (Stangoe v. Slatter (1896), 12 T. L. R. 335).

(f) See Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), Sched. III. The weight ticket or consignment note must contain the names of the buyer, of the seller, and of the person in charge of the vehicle; it must specify the amount of coal to be received, adding, when the coal is sold in sacks, the number of sacks and the weight in hundredweights contained in each sack; when the coal is sold in bulk, the weight of coal and vehicle, tare weight of vehicle, and net weight of coal therewith delivered to the purchaser or one to the like effect (g). If the seller fails to comply with this provision, or if the quantity of coal is less than that expressed in the note or ticket (h), he is liable to a fine not exceeding £5; and any person in charge of the vehicle in which the coal is conveyed is liable to a fine of the same amount if he refuses or neglects to deliver the ticket or note to the purchaser, or to exhibit it to any inspector of weights and measures or other officer (i) appointed by the local authority when requested to do so (k).

SECT. 1.

Coal.

971. If coal exceeding 2 cwts. is conveyed for delivery on sale in bulk the seller must, unless the vehicle is provided by the purchaser, cause the weight of the vehicle in which the coal is conveyed, as well as that of the coal, to be previously ascertained by a weighing instrument stamped by an inspector must also be stated. The prescribed form concludes with a summary of the provisions stated in the text. The trade name (not necessarily the real name) of the seller is all that it is necessary to enter on the ticket (Cameron v. Tyler, [1899] 2 Q. B. 94). Except in the case of a sale in bulk (compare Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 22; see the text, infra), the coal and the cart may be weighed and the ticket may be filled up on the premises of the purchaser (Edwards v. Purnell, [1899] 1 Q. B. 449).

(g) Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 21 (1).

(h) If the amount is described as 2 tons in twenty sacks of 2 cwts. each it is not necessary that each sack should contain exactly 2 cwts., but the total quantity must correspond with the total weight on the ticket (Godfrey v. Radford (1896), 75 L. T. 224). As to delivery in sacks in separate loads, see Kyle v. Dunsdon, [1908] 2 K. B. 293.

(i) See Atty v. Farrell, [1896] 1 Q. B. 636, where it was held that, as the selection of special persons for the purpose was contemplated, a bye-law under the Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 28 (see p. 483, post), empowering any constable to demand the re-weighing of coals was unreasonable, and although the re-weighing was demanded by an inspector of weights and measures the conviction was quashed.

(k) Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 21 (2), (3). The London Coal Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.), s. 52 (which is still in force (Houghton v. Fear Brothers, Ltd., and Willsher, [1913] 2 K. B. 343)), enacts that any carman or driver of any cart, wagon, or other carriage laden with coals for sale, to be delivered to the purchaser or purchasers thereof by any seller or sellers of, or dealers in, or carrier or carriers of coals from any ship, lighter, barge or other craft, or from any wharf, warehouse or other place within the cities of London and Westminster, or within the distance of twenty-five miles from the General Post Office, who has not placed in, on, or under his cart, wagon or carriage a perfect weighing machine marked at the Guildhall, London, by the proper officer there, is liable to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding £10 for every such offence, and the seller or dealers or carriers of such coal is liable to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding £20. By the London Coal Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.), s. 43, all coal sold within the limits of the Act must be sold by weight. As to the sale of coal in sacks under the Act, see Collins v. Hopwood (1846), 15 M. & W. 459; as to weighing the coal at the request of the purchaser, see Smith v. Wood (1889), 24 Q. B. D. 23, C. A., following Meredith v. Holman (1847), 16 M. & W. 798. Stat. (1838) 1 & 2 Vict. c. ci., s. 1, which provides that the London Coal Act, 1831 (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. lxxvi.), and all its provisions, should be continued for the further term of seven years from the 31st December, 1838, has been held to refer only to those provisions of the earlier Act which required to be so continued if they were not to expire, and those of its provisions which were of a permanent nature (including ibid., s. 52) have not been abrogated (Houghton v. Fear Brothers, Ltd., and Willsher, supra).

SECT. 1.
Coal.

of weights and measures, on or near to the place from which the coal is brought, and must from time to time cause the tare weight of the vehicle to be marked thereon in such manner as the local authority approves. In any such case the seller of the coal is also required to insert, or cause to be inserted, in the ticket a statement of the correct weight of the vehicle (l), or of the vehicle and of the animal drawing it, where both are weighed together with the load, as well as of the correct weight of coal contained in the vehicle, and, on failure to comply with these provisions is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 (m). A similar penalty is imposed on any person in charge of any vehicle in which coal is being carried who wilfully makes any false statement, or does any act by which either the seller or purchaser of the coal is defrauded (n), and also on any person who, on the sale of coal in any quantity not exceeding 2 cwt., fraudulently delivers to the purchaser a less quantity than is agreed to be sold (o).

Sale by retail. 972. Where coal is sold by retail for delivery at the place where it is kept for sale, and there is not at or near such place any weighing instrument stamped by an inspector of weights and measures, the seller must keep such an instrument at that place and weigh any coal before its sale or delivery, if required to do so by any purchaser, inspector of weights and measures, or any officer appointed for the purpose by the local authority; and if he fails to do so, he is liable to a penalty not exceeding £2 for a first offence, and £5 for any subsequent offence (p).

Provision of weighing machines.

973. The local authority may erect and maintain fixed weighing instruments at convenient places for the purpose of weighing coal and provide and appoint proper persons to keep and attend weighing instruments for that purpose, and any person so appointed who refuses, without reasonable excuse, to weigh or re-weigh any vehicle or coal, or who weighs any vehicle or coal so as wilfully to defraud either the seller or the purchaser of coal, is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 (q).

Weighing and re-weighing.

974. Any seller or purchaser of coal, person in charge of a vehicle in which coal is carried, inspector of weights and measures, or other officer appointed by the local authority for the purpose, may require any coal or any vehicle used for the carriage of coal in bulk to be weighed or re-weighed by any weighing instrument stamped by an inspector of weights and measures, and any person obstructing any such weighing or re-weighing is liable to a fine not exceeding £5. No seller of coal or person in charge of a vehicle is, however, required to carry coal beyond such distance, not exceeding half a mile, as may be prescribed by the local authority; and where such coal has, at the instance of the purchaser, been weighed or re-weighed, and found to be of the weight stated by the seller or the person in charge of the vehicle, the purchaser is liable to the payment of all reasonable costs actually incurred of and incidental to the weighing or re-weighing (r).

SECT. 1.

Coal.

975. Local authorities may from time to time make, revoke and alter bye-laws for—(1) regulating the sale of coal in quantities not exceeding 2 cwts.; (2) requiring, either generally or in specified classes of cases, a weighing instrument of a form prescribed by the local authority, to be carried in any vehicle in which coal is carried for sale (s) or delivery to a purchaser; (3) prescribing the distance beyond which coal is not to be carried for the purpose of being weighed or re-weighed; and (4) fixing the fees to be paid for the use of any weighing instrument maintained by the local authority.

Bye-laws.

Every bye-law made by a local authority must, before being brought into operation, be approved by the Board of Trade, and be published in such manner as the local authority thinks necessary for giving notice to persons interested, and a copy must also be sent to the Board (t).

Approval of Board of Trade.

976. Any inspector of weights and measures or officer appointed by the local authority for the purpose may, at all reasonable times, enter any building or other place in which coal is sold or exposed for sale, and may stop any vehicle carrying coal for sale or delivery to a purchaser and may test any weights and weighing instruments,

Powers of inspectors.

(r) Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 27.

(s) A person carrying coal for the purpose of fulfilling specific orders previously given does not carry it for sale within the meaning of such a bye-law, even though there has been no specific appropriation of specific coal to the customers (Hunting v. Matthews (1913), 108 L. T. 1019).

(t) Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21), s. 28. By such bye-laws, fines, recoverable summarily, and not exceeding in each case £5, may be imposed for the breach of any such bye-law (ibid.). Bye-laws must be reasonable; but the fact that a portion of a bye-law is unreasonable or ultra vires does not invalidate other parts of that bye-law (Kent County Council v. Humphrey, [1895] 1 Q. B. 903, where it was held that a local authority may make a bye-law requiring coal dealers to provide, and persons employed by them in conveying coal for sale or delivery to a purchaser from or out of any vehicle to carry with such vehicle, a correct and stamped weighing machine of the form approved by the local authority). A bye-law requiring every vehicle carrying coal for sale to carry a weighing instrument of a form approved by the local authority has, however, been held to be too vague to be reasonable (Martin v. Clarke (1892), 62 L. J. (M. C.) 178). In Ally v. Farrell, [1896] 1 Q. B. 636, and Crick v. Nicholls, [1905] 1 K. B. 501, it was held, under a bye-law requiring means of weighing to be carried on carts, that sufficient weights must be carried to weigh any sack of coal in the cart. Where a bye-law provided that "the person in charge of every vehicle carrying coal for sale shall carry therewith a weighing instrument of a form approved by the local authority, together with correct weights," it was held that a person carrying coal for the sole purpose of fulfilling specific orders, previously given, did not carry coal for sale within the meaning of the bye-law, even though there had been no unconditional appropriation of specific coal to the customers (Hunting v. Matthews, supra); compare Ward v. Franklin (1909), 101 L. T. 681; see title LOCAL GOVERNMENT, Vol. XIX., p. 328.

and weigh any load, sack, or less quantity of coal found in such place or vehicle, or which is in course of delivery to any purchaser; and any person obstructing or hindering an inspector is liable to a fine not exceeding £5, or in the case of a second or any subsequent offence £10. If it appears to a court of summary jurisdiction that any load, sack or less quantity so weighed is of less weight than that represented by the seller (a), the person selling or exposing the coal for sale, or the person in charge of the vehicle, as the case may be, is liable to a fine not exceeding £5 (b).

Exempted areas.

977. On the application of the local authority of any area, and on being satisfied that the provisions with respect to the sale of coal therein under any local Act in force on the 1st January, 1890, are more stringent than the provisions of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (c), His Majesty may, from time to time, exempt such area from the provisions of that Act relating to the sale of coal, by Order in Council, to such an extent and under such conditions as may appear expedient (d).

SECT. 2.—Herrings.

Sale by cran.

978. Herrings may be sold by weight, or number, or in bulk (e). Where, however, the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries has, on the application of a local authority, declared, by order (to be published in such manner as the Board direct) the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (f), to be in force in the district of such authority or in any part thereof (g), any person buying, selling, delivering, or receiving fresh herrings may use the measure known as the cran, the content or capacity of which is determined by regulations made under s. 13 of the Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1815 (h), or a quarter-cran measure, of such capacity that four times its content when

(a) A master does not necessarily make a representation by the representation of his servant under this provision (Roberts v. Woodward (1890), 25 Q. B. D. 412). Where, however, a coal dealer filled up a delivery check which was eventually given to a carman, the dealer was held to have made a representation, and was convicted of giving short weight (Baker v. Herd (1894), 58 J. P. 413); and a coal dealer has been convicted under this provision for misrepresentation for using metal labels indicating the weight contained attached to sacks, which did not in fact contain that weight (Franklin v. Godfrey (1894), 63 L. J. (M. C.) 239).

This provision, which with most of the Act was repealed as regards Scotland by the Sea Fisheries Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 45), empowered the Commissioners for the Herring Fisheries "to fix and determine by rules and regulations" the capacity, form, dimensions and materials of cran measures and the method of marking them, and imposed penalties for the infringement of such regulations.

filled with herrings are equal to one cran (i). Any local authority applying for an order must for two weeks at least before the application to the Board give notice of its intention by advertising once at least in each of such weeks in one or more newspapers circulating in its district, and no order can be made until proof of such advertisement has been given to the satisfaction of the Board and until a month after the date of the latest advertisement (j).

SECT. 2.
Herrings.

979. A cran or quarter-cran measure must be made in such manner, of wood or other material, and be branded or otherwise marked by an inspector of weights and measures in such manner as may be prescribed (k); and when so made and marked such measures are the only legal measures for use in buying, selling, delivering, or receiving fresh herrings in any place in which the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (l), is in force. Any person using or having in his possession in any place for any such purpose any box, basket, or measure not so made and marked (except as hereinafter provided) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5 for the first offence, and not exceeding £20 for the second or any subsequent offence, with the forfeiture of the measure, and any bargain, contract, sale, or dealing made by such a measure is void (m).

Cran
measures.

980. The local authority must fix the times and places within its district at which an inspector of weights and measures is to attend for the purpose of the verification of the cran and quarter-cran measures, and the inspector must then and there examine in the prescribed manner any measures brought to him for verification. If he finds the measure to be correctly made he must brand or otherwise mark it in the prescribed manner; but a cran or quarter-cran measure is not liable to be re-marked because used in any place other than that in which it was originally marked. Any inspector who brands or otherwise marks a cran or quarter-cran measure in contravention of the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (l), or regulations made there under, or without duly verifying it in the prescribed manner, or who is guilty of a breach of any duty imposed on him by or under the Act, or otherwise misconducts himself in the execution of his powers, is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £5 for each offence (n).

Verification
of measures.

981. An inspector, if authorised in writing by a justice of the peace, may at all reasonable times inspect all cran or quarter-cran measures within his jurisdiction which are used or are in the possession of any person, or any premises for use for trade in fresh herrings, and may seize and detain any measure which is liable to be forfeited in pursuance of the Act, and may for the purpose of such inspection enter any place, whether a building or a vessel or in the open air, whether open or enclosed, where he has reasonable cause to believe that there is any measure which he is authorised to inspect. Any person who neglects or refuses to produce for such inspection all such measures in his possession or on his premises, or refuses to permit the officer to examine them or any of them, or who obstructs his entry or otherwise obstructs or hinders him, is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £5, or in the case of a second or subsequent offence £10 (o).

Fees.

An inspector may take, in respect of the verification and making of cran measures, only such fees as may be specified by Order in Council (p), and he must at such times, not less than once a quarter, as the local authority direct, account for and pay over all fees so taken to the local authority or as it directs (q).

False measures.

982. Any person who forges or counterfeits any mark used for marking cran or quarter-cran measures, or wilfully increases or diminishes the capacity of such measures, is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £50; and any person removing a mark from any measure and inserting it into another is deemed to forge or counterfeit such mark. Any person who knowingly sells, utters, disposes of, or exposes for sale any measure with a forged or counterfeit mark, or any measure so increased or diminished, is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £10, and all such measures are forfeited (r).

Legal cran measures.

983. Cran and quarter-cran measures made and marked under and in accordance with the Herring Fishery (Scotland) Act, 1889 (s), and the Branding of Herrings (Northumberland) Act, 1891 (t), are legal measures for use for buying, selling, delivering, or receiving fresh herrings in any place in which the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (u), is in force (v). Measures made and marked in accordance with the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (u), are legal measures for use in the Scotch herring fisheries, and in any area to which the powers of the Fishery Board for Scotland extend under the Branding of Herrings (Northumberland) Act, 1891 (t), and the powers of the Fishery Board for Scotland and of its officers under the last-named Act cease to be exercisable, so far as concerns the marking or otherwise dealing with cran or quarter-cran measures, in any part of an area in which the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (u), is put in force (a).

984. The Board of Agriculture and Fisheries may, as regards cran and quarter-cran measures, make regulations with respect to any matter which may be prescribed, and with respect to which the Board of Trade may make general regulations under the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878—1904 (b), subject to the conditions applicable to the making of such regulations (c).

Regulations.

985. Such portion of any fine under the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (d), not exceeding a moiety, as the court of summary jurisdiction before whom a person is convicted thinks fit to direct, may, if the court in its discretion so orders, be paid to the informer, unless such informer is an inspector of weights and measures (e).

Application of fines.

All measures forfeited under the Cran Measures Act, 1908 (d), are broken up and the materials sold or otherwise disposed of as a court of summary jurisdiction directs; the proceeds of sale are applied in the same manner as fines under the Act (f).

986. A person is not liable to any increased penalty for a second offence unless such offence was committed after conviction within five years previously for an offence under the same provision of the Act; but where the court by which a person is convicted is of opinion that the offence was committed with intent to defraud, such person is liable to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one month in addition to, or in lieu of, any fine (g).

Increased penalties

987. Where any cran or quarter-cran measure is found in the possession of any person carrying on trade in fresh herrings, or on the premises of any person which, whether a building or a vessel, or in the open air, whether open or enclosed, are used for trade in fresh herrings, that person is deemed, until the contrary is proved, to have the measures in his possession for use for trade in fresh herrings (h).

Presumption of user.

by weight.

991. The Acts for the time being in force relating to weights and measures apply to weights, measures, scales, balances, steel-yards and weighing machines used in a factory or workshop in checking or ascertaining the wages of any person employed therein, as if they were used in the sale of goods and as if the factory or workshop were a place where goods are kept for sale (n); and every inspector or other person authorised to inspect or examine weights and measures may inspect, stamp, mark, search for, and examine such weights and measures, scales, balances, steelyards and weighing machines, and for that purpose has the same powers and duties in relation to them as he has in the case of the sale of goods (o).

Carriage of goods.

992. A toll-collector or other officer of a railway company may detain, examine, weigh, gauge or measure any carriage or goods conveyed in any carriage over the railway of the company in any case in which a difference arises between the toll-collector, or other officer, and the owner or person in charge of the goods respecting their weight, quantity, quality or nature; and if the goods, after examination or measuring, appear to be greater in weight or quantity, or to be of another nature, than is stated in the account describing them, the person giving the account must pay, and the owner of the carriage or the respective owners of the goods will be liable to pay the costs of measurement and examination (p). If, however, the goods are of the same or less weight or quantity than and of the same nature as stated in the account, the costs are payable by the company, and the company is also liable to the owner or person in charge of the carriage, and to the respective owners of the goods, for any damages which may appear to any

SECT. 2.
Mills and lanes.

SUB-SECT. 2.—Particular Articles.

993. Every miller, or other person keeping a mill for grinding corn, must have in the mill a true and equal balance with proper weights according to the imperial standard, and is liable on failure to comply with this provision to forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 20s. (s).

Grinding
corn.

Every person who brings or causes any corn to be brought to any mill to be ground may require the miller, or other person acting for him or keeping the mill; to weigh, in his presence, such corn before it is ground, and after it is ground may require the miller or other person to weigh, in his presence, the produce of the corn so ground; and any miller or other person refusing to weigh the said corn is liable to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s. (t).

Every miller, or other person keeping a mill for grinding corn, must, after grinding any corn, deliver to the person who brings it, if such person requires, the whole produce of such corn in weight, allowing for the diminution in weight caused by the waste in grinding, and by taking toll in cases where toll (u) is allowed to be taken; or if the corn is dressed into flour, then the whole produce in weight, allowing for the diminution in weight caused by grinding and dressing, and taking toll. If the corn, on being weighed after grinding, or after grinding and dressing, weighs less than the full weight, after allowing for the diminution aforesaid, the miller must, for every bushel of corn so deficient in weight, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 1s., and also treble the value of such deficiency (w).

The Mills Act, 1795 (36 Geo. 3, c. 85), does not apply to soken mills or mills where a right to take toll has been established by custom or law (ibid., s. 5), nor to private mills (ibid., s. 7).

Returns to Board of Agriculture and Fisheries.

994. In the returns of the purchases of British corn directed to be made under the direction of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries by certain towns and certain buyers of corn in such towns, specified by Order in Council, in accordance with the provisions of the Corn Returns Act, 1882 (x), the weekly summary of quantities and prices to be sent to the Board by inspectors of corn returns in such towns is computed with reference to the imperial bushel (y). An inspector of corn returns must convert into imperial bushels all returns made to him, in any other measure or by weight or by a weighed measure, and, in the case of weight or weighed measure, must convert them at the rate of sixty imperial pounds for every bushel of wheat, fifty imperial pounds for every bushel of barley, and thirty-nine imperial pounds for every bushel of oats (a).

Measurement of electricity
etc.

995. The Board of Trade must from time to time cause such new denominations of standards for the measurement of electricity, temperature, pressure, or gravities as appear to the Board to be required for use for trade to be made and duly verified, and these new denominations of standards, when approved by His Majesty in Council, whether derived from imperial or from other standards, will be Board of Trade standards in the same manner as if mentioned in the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (b), Schedule II. (c).

Sale of hay and straw.

996. A public book or register for entering and registering therein an account of all hay and straw sold within the cities of London and Westminster or within thirty miles thereof must be kept in some convenient place in every market for the sale of hay or straw; in the City of London by the clerk or toll-collector

Rev., Vol. XIII., Weights and Measures, pp. 16, 17), stated the limits of accuracy attainable in the use of denominations of standards for the measurement of electricity as: for the ohm, within one hundredth part of 1 per cent.; for the ampere, within one-tenth part of 1 per cent.; for the volt, within one-tenth part of 1 per cent. In consequence of conclusions arrived at by the International Conference on Electrical Units and Standards held in London in October, 1908, these standards have now been amended by an Order of the 10th January, 1910 (Stat. R. & O., 1910, p. 845), the schedule to which sets out new denominations of standards with respect to (i.) electrical resistance, (ii.) electrical current, and (iii.) electrical pressure. appointed by the Lord Mayor, commonalty and citizens, and also in and for every similar market within the city of Westminster and limits aforesaid by the clerks or toll-gatherers within their several jurisdictions. The book must be open daily for inspection between 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. on payment of the sum of one penny for each inspection (d). Every clerk or toll-collector must be provided with proper scales, weights, or engines for weighing hay and straw to be kept at the office of the clerk of every hay market within the two cities; and the clerk or toll-collector or his deputy is the hay and straw weigher (e).

SECT. 8.
Miscellaneous.

997. The buyer of any hay or straw sold within the limits aforesaid, or his servant or agent, may, on its delivery at the abode, yard, or loft of the buyer, or any other place agreed to by the seller, cause it to be weighed in the presence of the seller, his servant or agent, and if the buyer or seller, or the servant or agent of either, is dissatisfied with such weighing, he may, if the hay is delivered within a parish having a hay market, with all convenient speed apply to the hay weigher nearest to the place where the hay or straw is delivered to re-weigh it. The hay weigher so applied to must come with all convenient speed and weigh the hay or straw complained of, and the weight as ascertained by him is conclusive on all parties; but his attendance to weigh cannot be demanded until the person requiring it has paid or tendered the sum of 8s. per load, or in proportion for a greater or less quantity. If the hay or straw weighed is not of the weight it purports to be, the sum paid must forthwith be repaid by the seller (f).

Duties of hay weigher.

Any clerk or toll-gatherer, within the limits aforesaid who omits to provide proper scales, weights, or engines for the weighing of hay or straw, or neglects or refuses to weigh any hay or straw at any reasonable time in the daytime when required after the tender or payment of the sum aforesaid, is liable to a penalty not exceeding £5 or less than 10s. for every offence (g).

(d) Hay and Straw Act, 1796 (36 Geo. 3, c. 88), s. 10, which also provides for the regulations prescribed with respect to the registration of sales of hay and straw. Clerks and toll-collectors are prohibited by ibid., s. 12, from buying or selling hay or straw under a penalty of 2s. 6d. per bundle of hay, and 1s. per bundle of straw, bought or sold.

(e) Ibid., s. 13; the provision that scales etc. shall be kept at the watch-house of each parish by the churchwardens and overseers (ibid.) appears to be obsolete.

(f) Ibid. If the clerk or hay weigher applied to fails to come with all convenient speed the buyer may apply to such other as may be nearest to the place where the hay or straw is delivered (ibid.).

(g) Ibid. No penalty is, however, payable for selling hay or straw deficient in weight unless it be weighed at or before delivery with the privy of the buyer, his servant, or agent, or be complained of in respect of the quality at the time and place at which it has been agreed to be delivered by the seller in the presence of himself, his servant, or agent, or on neglect or refusal of such seller to attend to see the same weighed when required (ibid., s. 14). Penalties are also imposed for fraudulently increasing weight (ibid., s. 21; see also p. 492, post), and delivering less than the number of trusses sold (Hay and Straw Act, 1796 (36 Geo. 3, c. 88), s. 22). Provision is made for the recovery of forfeitures by ibid., ss. 28, 30, and for the limitation of prosecutions by ibid., s. 25.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Fraudulent increase of weight.

Ticket.

Disputes as to weight.

Sale of intoxicating liquor.

998. No person may mix or put, or cause to be mixed or put, any water, sand, earth, or other matter, or thing whatsoever, in any bundle or truss of hay or straw intended for sale within the cities of London and Westminster or within thirty miles thereof with intent fraudulently to increase the weight, nor sell, offer, or expose for sale or cause to be sold, offered, or exposed for sale any hay or straw into or with which any water, sand, earth, or other matter has been mixed with such intent (h).

999. Every salesman or other person who sells any hay or straw for the owner in any market or place within the limits aforesaid (i) must, at the time of the sale or the delivery of the hay or straw, deliver or cause to be delivered to the buyer a ticket or note containing the number of trusses sold, and the christian name, surname, and address of the owner (k).

1000. Where any hay or straw is offered or exposed for sale in any public hay market within the foregoing limits, and complaint is made to the clerk or toll-collector that it is different in weight or quantity, or has been mixed or packed contrary to any of the foregoing provisions, the clerk or collector must weigh and examine the same, and if the hay or straw is then found different in weight or quantity, or mixed with any foreign matter contrary to the provisions aforesaid, he may summon the offender or offenders before any justice of the peace having jurisdiction in the district where the market is situated, who must upon proof thereof convict the offender or offenders in the respective penalties imposed for such offences (l).

1001. All intoxicating liquor sold by retail (m) and not in cask or bottle, and not sold in a quantity less than half a pint, must be sold in measures marked according to the imperial standards (n); and every person who acts or suffers any person under his control or in his employment to act in contravention of this provision is

(m) "Sale by retail" means the sale of an intoxicating liquor in such quantities as is declared by any Acts relating to the sale of such liquors to be sale by retail (Licensing (Consolidation) Act, 1910 (10 Edw. 7 & 1 Geo. 5, c. 24) s. 110); as to beer, see Beerhouse Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 85), s. 19; Fairclough v. Roberts (1890), 24 Q. B. D. 350; see also Spirits Act, 1886 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24), s. 104; Refreshment Houses Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 27), s. 4.

A measure which is a multiple or part of an imperial standard is not an illegal measure (Bellamy v. Pow (1896), 60 J. P. 112). If the intoxicating liquor, though asked for under some local term, is, when supplied, of a quantity amounting to half a pint or more, the provision of the statute applies (Payne v. Thomas, supra); compare, however, Craig v. McPhee (1883), 3 Rottie (Justiciary Cases), 51, where a conviction under the Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), for using glass vessels not represented to be imperial measures, for the sale of whisky, was quashed.

liable to a penalty not exceeding £10 for the first and not exceeding £20 for any subsequent offence, and also to forfeit the illegal measure in which the liquor was sold (o).

SMO. 3.
Miscellaneous.

No person, however, is subject to any penalties under the Weights and Measures Acts (p) for the sale of an article in any vessel which is not represented as containing any amount of imperial measure or for being in possession of a vessel which is shown not to be used or intended for use as a measure (q).

1002. There must be legibly cut, branded, or painted with oil colour, on some conspicuous part of every fixed cask or other vessel used by a dealer or retailer for holding spirits in stock, and on the outside of both the ends of every movable cask used by him for keeping or delivering spirits, the number of gallons which the cask or vessel is capable of containing. Every cask not so cut, branded, or painted is liable to forfeiture with the contents, and the dealer or retailer incurs a fine of £50 (r). Where the strength of any spirits forming part of the stock of a dealer or retailer cannot be ascertained by Sykes's hydrometer or other authorised means (s), the dealer or retailer must, on being so required by an officer, cause the quantity and strength of the spirits to be legibly marked on the outside of the cask or vessel containing them; and every cask or vessel which a dealer or retailer neglects or refuses, on being so required, to mark, or fails to keep so marked, or which is found to be untruly marked, is liable to be forfeited with the contents, and the dealer or retailer, for each offence, incurs a fine of £50 (t). A cask or vessel is not, however, deemed to be untruly marked if the strength denoted by the mark corresponds with that expressed in the permit or certificate with which the spirits were received into stock, and no alteration has since been made to the spirits (a).

(r) Spirits Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 24), s. 98. By ibid., s. 3, "spirits" means spirits of any description, and includes all liquors mixed with spirits, and all mixtures, compounds or preparations made with spirits.

(s) The Commissioners of Customs and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may jointly make regulations authorising the use of any means described in the regulations for ascertaining for any purpose the strength or weight of spirits. Where by any enactment Sykes's hydrometer is directed to be used or may be used for the purpose of ascertaining the strength or weight of spirits, any means so authorised by regulations may be used instead of Sykes's hydrometer, and references to Sykes's hydrometer in any enactment will be construed accordingly. Such regulations must be published in the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Gazettes, and take effect from the date of publication or such later date as may be mentioned therein (Finance Act, 1907 (7 Edw. 7, c. 13), s. 4). the port of the City of London and landed within the City and liberties are subject and liable to be gauged by the Lord Mayor in virtue of his office of gauger, or by his sufficient deputies lawfully appointed. All tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads or other vessels found to be deficient in capacity, together with the wine or other liquids therein contained, are liable to seizure and forfeiture under any Act or Acts of Parliament for ascertaining the true contents of tuns, pipes, tertians, hogsheads, or other vessels of wine, oil, honey, and other gaugeable liquors; the moieties of such forfeitures due to the Crown are ascertained and accounted for by the Lord Mayor, as such gauger and his deputies, to His Majesty in the High Court of Justice (b).

Sale of tea
etc. in packets.

1004. The weighing of the wrapper or bag in which tea, sugar, or other goods are packed for delivery to the purchaser in the same scales with such goods may, in certain circumstances, render the vendor liable either for using false or unjust weights (c) or for wilfully committing a fraud in the using of such scales (d). The offence of using a scale which is false or unjust may be constituted by using a scale which is unjust as a scale when in use (e). Thus, a scale is false or unjust if it does not hang true at the time of weighing when an equal weight is put into the goods scoop and into the weight dish on the other side (f), and this may be due to the presence in the goods scoop of a folded bag (g) or piece of paper (h), or other equivalent in weight of the bag in which the tea is to be placed after removal from the scoop (i). A seller may be guilty of wilfully committing fraud in the use of his scales when tea is weighed with paper though the weighing is done before the customer's eyes, if it is so done as to suggest to him that the weight of the tea alone is being ascertained (k). There must, however, be fraud in the use of the scales (l). If, therefore, a customer who asks for a particular weight of goods receives a packet of that weight containing the goods specified, and the packet is not weighed in his presence, but is one of a number of similar packets which have been previously weighed by the seller, the goods in each packet having been in the paper bag in which they are contained, and the scales in which the weighing was done being perfectly just and accurate and giving the weight of each packet correctly, the seller is not guilty of a fraud wilfully committed in the using of such scales (m).

Part VII.—Offences and Legal Proceedings.

1005. All offences under the Weights and Measures Acts (n) may be prosecuted and all fines and forfeitures recovered on summary conviction before a court of summary jurisdiction as provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (o). The court when hearing or determining an information or complaint under the Weights and Measures Acts (n) must be constituted either of two or more justices of the peace in petty sessions, sitting at a place appointed for holding such sessions, or of some magistrate or other officer sitting alone or with others at some court or other place appointed for the administration of justice, and for the time being empowered by law to do alone any act authorised to be done by more than one justice of the peace (p). Such portion of any fine under the Weights and Measures Acts (n), not exceeding a moiety, as the court of summary jurisdiction before whom a person is convicted directs, may, if the court so orders, be paid to the informer, unless he be an inspector of weights and measures (q). All weights, measures, scales, balances, and steel-yards forfeited under the Acts must be broken up and the materials sold or otherwise disposed of as a court of summary jurisdiction directs, the proceeds of the sale being applicable in the same manner as fines under the Weights and Measures Acts (r).

No person is liable to any increased penalty for a second offence under the Acts unless it was committed after a conviction within five years previously for an offence under the same section (s).

1006. Where any weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard, or weighing machine is found in the possession of any person carrying on trade within the meaning of the Weights and Measures Acts (t), or on the premises of any person which, whether a building or in the open air, whether open or enclosed, are used for trade within the meaning of the Acts, such person is to be deemed, until the contrary is proved, to have the weight, measure, scale, balance, steelyard, or weighing machine in his possession for use for trade (u).

Publication of conviction.

1007. Where a person is convicted before any court of any offence under the Weights and Measures Acts (a), the court may, if it thinks fit, cause the conviction to be published in such manner as it thinks desirable (b).

Appeals.

1008. Any person who feels himself aggrieved by a conviction or order of a court of summary jurisdiction may appeal therefrom to the next practicable court of quarter sessions (c).

Tender of amends.

1009. In an action for any act done in pursuance or execution, or intended execution, of the Weights and Measures Acts (a), or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in their execution, tender of amends before the action is commenced may, in lieu of or in addition to any other plea, be pleaded, if the action was commenced after such tender, or is proceeded with after payment into court of any money in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. If the action is commenced after such tender or is proceeded with after such payment, and the plaintiff does not recover more than the sum tendered or paid respectively, the plaintiff may not recover any costs incurred after such tender or payment, and the defendant is entitled to his costs, to be taxed as between solicitor and client, as from the time of such tender or payment. This provision does not, however, affect costs on any injunction in the action (d).

Other remedies.

1010. No proceeding or conviction for any offence punishable under the Weights and Measures Acts (a) affects any civil remedy Part VIII.—Expenses of Local Authorities.

1011. The expense of providing and reverifying local standards, the salaries of inspectors, and all other expenses incurred by the local authority under the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878—1904 (g) are payable out of the local rate (h). Local rate.

1012. Any two or more local authorities may combine, as regards either the whole or any part of the areas within their jurisdiction, for all or any of the purposes of the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878—1904 (g), upon such terms and in such manner as may be from time to time mutually agreed upon; and an inspector appointed in pursuance of such an agreement has, subject to the terms of his appointment, the same authority, jurisdiction, and duties as if appointed by each of the authorities who are parties to it (i). Combination of authorities.

1013. Where a town or other place has been, or may hereafter be, authorised under any Act, whether local or otherwise, to appoint inspectors or examiners of weights and measures, or where any other place has been, or may hereafter be, possessed of legal jurisdiction by charter, Act of Parliament, or otherwise (k), and such Franchise.

(g) As to the Weights and Measures Acts, see note (a), p. 460, ante.

(h) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 51. The treasurer of the county in which a borough having a separate court of quarter sessions is situate must exclude from the account kept by him of all sums expended out of the county rate, to which the borough is liable to contribute, all sums expended in pursuance of the Acts (ibid.).

(i) Ibid., s. 52.

(k) The Weights and Measures (Purchase) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 18), s. 1 (1), (3), empowers county or borough councils to purchase any franchise of weights and measures, and for that purpose to borrow, in the case of county councils in accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), and in the case of borough councils, with those of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55). The expenses incurred by borough councils under this Act are defrayed out of the borough fund or borough rate, and any money borrowed must be borrowed on the security of such fund or rate (Weights and Measures (Purchase) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 18), s. 1 (4)). The term "franchise of weights and measures" includes the authority which any court ~~leet~~ for any hundred or manor, or any jury or ward inquest, or the lord or lady of any manor, or any other person, may have for inspecting, examining, regulating, verifying, stamping, adjusting, seizing, breaking or destroying any weights or measures, or weighing instrument or measuring instrument (ibid., s. 1 (5)).

PART VIII.
Expenses
of Local Authorities.

town or place is, for the time being, provided with legal local standards, the magistrates or other authorised persons may appoint, suspend, or dismiss inspectors of weights and measures within the limits of their jurisdiction. Such inspectors possess, exclusively within such limits, the same power and discharge the same duties as inspectors of weights and measures appointed by the local authority for the county, and must pay over and account for the fees received by them to persons duly authorised by the magistrates or other persons appointing them (l).

Reimbursement by
 council.

1014. The mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of a borough not being a county borough, and not having a separate court of quarter sessions, who were, on the 1st January, 1893, the legally constituted authority for the purposes of the Weights and Measures Acts, 1878—1892 (m), or for the execution of the law relating to weights and measures under any local Act, are entitled to be paid by the county council of the county in which the borough is situate, once in every year, the proportionate amount contributed towards the expenses incurred by the council in the execution of those Acts by the several parishes, and parts of parishes, within the borough, such proportion being calculated according to the values stated in the basis for county rates in force for the time being. When, however, the amount received by a county council from the execution of those Acts is in excess of the expenditure, a proportionate part of such excess must be deducted from any sum due to such borough as a recoupment under the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts (n) or the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts (o) respectively (p).

Where a county council has acquired any such franchise in respect of any area within a borough, the council of which is not, at the time of acquisition, the local authority with respect to weights and measures, the council of that borough cannot become the local authority until it has recouped to the county council such proportion of the expenses of acquiring the franchise and in executing the law with respect to weights and measures as may be agreed upon by the respective councils, or, in the case of difference, determined by the Board of Trade (Weights and Measures (Purchase) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 18), s. 2). A franchise of this description is "land" within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Acts, the provisions of which, except such as relate to the purchase and taking of land otherwise than by agreement, are incorporated with the Act (ibid., s. 1 (2)).

(l) Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 54. Ibid., s. 55, empowers vestries, commissioners or other bodies, exercising powers under local Acts or charters in any place in the metropolis, to put an end to the appointment of inspectors of weights and measures under such local Acts or charters. Ibid., s. 67, saves the rights of the Founders' Company.

Part I.—Nature of a Will.

SECT. 1.—Definitions and Interpretation.

1015. A will or testament (a) is the declaration in a prescribed manner (b) of the intentions of the person making it, with regard to matters which he wishes to take effect upon or after his death (c). It may be made for the purpose of appointing his executors (d), or other persons whom he wishes to manage or assist in managing any part of his estate (e), or for the purpose of making dispositions

Definition of a will.

(a) The old distinction between the terms is said to be that "will" is a general term, and that where lands or tenements are devised, though no executor is appointed, the instrument is properly called a will (Wyll v. Hall (1675), 2 Rep. Ch. 59 [112]), and that where it concerns chattels only, and appoints an executor, it is called a testament (Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 399; Bac. Abr., tit. Wills and Testaments (A); Swinburne on Wills, 7th ed., p. 4). The distinction is not adhered to; see Littleton's Tenures, s. 167; the terms appear to be used interchangeably, for example, in the now repealed stats. (1540) 32 Hen. 8, c. 1, and (1542) 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 5.

(b) As to the manner and form necessary, see pp. 545 et seq., post.

(c) Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 399; Termes de la Ley, sub voce Testament; 2 Bl. Com. 499, explaining the definition of the civil law (voluntatis nostræ juxta sententia de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri voluit), adopted in A.-G. v. Jones and Bartlett (1817), 3 Price, 368, 391.

(d) As to executors or administrators, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 131 et seq.

(e) The mere appointment of any assistants or coadjutors to the executors, trustees, or persons beneficially entitled has no effect either on of property to take effect on or after his death (f), or appointing guardians of his infant children after his death (g), or exercising any power exercisable by him in this manner (h), or revoking or altering any previous will of his, or for any similar purpose taking effect on or after his death (i).

A codicil is of similar nature to a will, and in general is supplemental to and considered as annexed to a will previously made, and executed for the purpose of adding to, varying, or revoking the provisions of that will (k), though it is capable of independent existence (l).

the vesting of the property in the executors alone (Anon. (1346), Y. B. 20-Edw. 3, Mich. pl. 69; Rolls Series, p. 428), or as imposing on the executors, trustees or persons entitled beneficially under the will a trust or duty to employ the named persons in the specified manner (Shaw v. Hubbert (1808), 3 Mer. 681), may give effect to such directions. In some cases, however, the will creates in the named person's favour a charge, trust, or other interest (Friswell v. Moore (1819), cited 5 Cl. & Fin. 142), which may endure so long as the appointee does the business to the satisfaction of the trustees or other persons interested (Williams v. Corbet (1837), 8 Sim. 349; Belaney v. Kelly, supra; and see Saunders v. Rotherham (1862), 3 Giff. 556).

(i) A direction for the commencement of proceedings to administer the estate in court does not make it imperative on the court to make the order for administration (Re Stocken, Jones v. Hawkins (1888), 38 Ch. D. 319, C. A.). As to directions for burial, cremation, etc., see p. 525, post; and Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 557. The will may appoint any person for the purpose of deciding questions between the donees; see, for instance, Woodcock v. Woodcock (1800), Cro. Eliz. 795; Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., p. 494; and p. 630, post.

(l) The codicil does not now under the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 20 (see p. 564, post), stand or fall together with the will (Black v. Jobling (1869), L. R. 1 P. & D. 685; In the Goods of Savage (1870), L. R. 2 P. & D. 78; In the Goods of Turner (1872), L. R. 2 P. & D. 403 (codicil unintelligible without will); Farrer v. St. Catharine's College, Cambridge (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 19; Gardiner v. Courthope (1886), 12 P. D. 14 (language of codicil dependent on will); Paige v. Brooks (1896), 75 L. T. 455; see also Falle v. Godfray (1888), 14 App. Cas. 70; 76, P. C.). Under the law previous to the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), there was a presumption, subject to the intention of the testator, that the revocation of a will also effected the revocation of a codicil thereto (Mudbrook v. Asheton (1824), 2 Add. 229).

1016. The person making the will or codicil is in this title called "the testator" (m), and, where the context admits, the word "will" includes a will or testament, a codicil, and an appointment by will or by writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power (n), and also a disposition by will of the custody and tuition of any child under certain statutes (o), and any other testamentary disposition (p). The word strictly denotes the aggregate formal expression of the maker's testamentary intentions subsisting at his death, but is commonly used to describe one of a series of such instruments (q); in some cases in this title, where it is necessary to draw a distinction between the two meanings, the expression "the whole will" denotes such aggregate.

A "modern will" denotes a will made, revived or republished (r) since the 1st January, 1838 (s), by a testator of full capacity (a).

The words "real estate" (b) include manors, advowsons, (meaning of the word in the Real Estate Charges Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 113)); but the terms "testate," "intestate," "testacy," and "intestacy" in their ordinary sense are associated with the question how far the testator's property is disposed of by the will, whether completely, incompletely, or not at all; see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., pp. 1 et seq.: in a technical sense, adopted in a court of probate, these terms may be used with reference to the question whether an executor is in existence; see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 136.

However many unrevoked testamentary writings a man may leave, they together constitute but one will in the strict sense (Douglas-Menzies v. Umphelby, [1908] A. C. 224, 233, P. C., where the testator executed separate Scotch and Australian wills to be construed according to the law of those countries respectively). As to probate of concurrent wills dealing with the testator's properties in different countries, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 165. "Last will" and similar phrases mean, as a rule, no more than "will" (Walpole (Lord) v. Cholmondeley (Earl) (1797), 7 Term Rep. 138, 146, 150); and, on construction, a reference by a testator to his "last will," or a description of a document as such, may merely allude to or describe the last of a series of testamentary documents (Thomas v. Evans (1892), 2 East, 488, 496; Stoddart v. Grant (1851), 1 Macq. 163, 171, H. L.; Cutto v. Gilbert (1854), 9 Moo. P. C. C. 131; Freeman v. Freeman (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 704, C. "Personal estate" (d) includes leasehold estate and other chattels real (e), and also moneys, shares of Government and other funds, securities for money (not being real estate), debts, choses in action, rights, credits, goods, and all other property whatsoever (except real estate (f)) which by law devolves upon the executor or administrator, and any share or interest therein (g).

"Devise."

"Bequest," or "legacy."

"Devise" denotes a gift of real estate (h), and "bequest" (i) or "legacy" denotes a gift of personal estate, and "devisee" or "legatee" denotes a person or other object taking a benefit under a gift of real or personal estate respectively.

"Donee."

"Donee" includes devisee and legatee, or other the object of the testator's bounty in any kind of property.

"Gift."

"Gift" includes devise and bequest (k).

"Court of probate."

Any court entertaining, within the scope of its jurisdiction, the grant of probate of a will or of letters of administration with the will annexed (l), or any question relating to the character of an instrument alleged to be testamentary, or as to the testamentary capacity of a testator, or as to the validity of a will generally, for the purposes of the will being admitted to probate, is hereinafter called a "court of probate" (m), and such grant is called the "probate."

(c) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.

(d) As to personal estate, see title PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., pp. 387, 388.

(e) The Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), proceeds, not on the distinction between mobilia and immobilia (see title CONFLICT OF LAWS, Vol. VI., pp. 199 et seq.), but on that between real and personal estate in English law, and a similar distinction is imported under the Wills Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114) (Re Grassi, Stubberfield v. Grassi, [1905] 1 Ch. 584, 590, 591).

(f) This exception is rendered necessary by the change in the law relating to devolution effected by the Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 1; see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., p. 238.

(g) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 1.

(h) The word was formerly often used with respect to gifts by will of chattels real or other personal estate; see, for instance, Tilley v. Simpson (1740), 2 Term Rep. 659, n.; Hopewell v. Ackland (1710), 1 Salk. 239. The use in a will of the word "devise" in itself is not conclusive to show that the testator is dealing with real estate (Camfield v. Gilbert (1803), 3 East, 516, 521; Hall v. Hall, [1891] 3 Ch. 389, 393, affirmed, [1892] 1 Ch. 361, C. A.), though that prima facie is its meaning (Phillips v. Beal (1858), 25 Beav. 25).

(i) As to the origin of the term, see Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, Vol. II., p. 336. The word "bequest" or "legacy" in a will may in a proper context carry real estate; see p. 704, post.

(k) The term "gift over" is commonly used to describe a gift in succession to a prior gift, especially by way of executory devise or bequest; see p. 526, post. The term "limitation" is commonly used to describe a gift of a limited interest, or one of a series of gifts of the same property to persons in succession.

(l) As to the grant of probate or letters of administration generally, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 161 et seq.

(m) As to the jurisdiction of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division in probate matters, see title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV.,

Any court entertaining, within the scope of its jurisdiction, any question as to the meaning and effect of an instrument, admittedly of a testamentary nature, is hereinafter called a "court of construction" (n).

SECT. 2.—Characteristics and Effect of a Will.

1017. The essential characteristics of a will are that, during the life of the testator, it is a mere declaration of his intention (o), and that it may be freely revoked or altered in a prescribed manner (p).

Essential characteristics.

It is therefore ambulatory, or without a fixed effect (q), until the testator's death (r); upon that event it crystallises, and may for the first time take effect as an appointment, disposition or otherwise, according to its tenor (s); it requires the death of the testator for its consummation (t), and must be distinguished from a disposition made inter vivos, such as a voluntary settlement with a power of revocation (a), or any instrument consummate on execution by the maker, although intended to take effect on some future event (b).

Ambulatory nature.

An instrument, however, which, though in form a conveyance (c), is made on condition that it is to take effect only on the death of the conveying party, is often testamentary in character (d).

1018. The revocable nature of a will cannot be lost, even by a declaration that the will is irrevocable (e) or by a covenant not to

(o) See note (c), p. 505, ante.

(p) As to revocation, see p. 562, post.

(q) A will is sometimes said to be "ambulatory" in that it may operate on property which becomes the testator's only after the date of the will (Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, Vol. II., p. 313); but in this sense only modern wills can be so described, so far as real estate is concerned; see p. 517, post; and compare note (s), p. 512, post.

revoke the will (f). After revocation, however, whether by marriage or otherwise, the will may be revived in the prescribed manner (g).

1019. An instrument may be partly testamentary, and partly intended to take effect during the life of the person making it (h), except that by statute (i) a will made after the 1st January, 1866, by a person serving in the Royal Navy as a seaman or marine cannot be in the same instrument as a power of attorney (k). Even apart from the testator's intention, a will may have an effect other than testamentary, for example, as a memorandum of a contract (l) under the Statute of Frauds (m), or an acknowledgment of a statute-barred debt (n).

Instruments conditionally testamentary.

1020. An instrument may also be conditionally testamentary (o). Thus, a testator may refer in his will to some contingency, such as an impending journey by him or a possible impending calamity (p), or other event (q), in terms which make the will conditional, or limited in operation. The terms may, however, merely import that the contingency is a reason for making the will, in which case the will is not conditional (r). If the contingency is coincident with a period of danger to the testator, there is ground for supposing that the danger was regarded by the testator only as a reason for making a will (s). A conditional will is of no effect if the contingency fails (t), but may take effect free from the contingency in question if re-executed or republished after the contingency has passed (u).

SECT. 2.
Characteristics and Effect of a Will.

1021. In considering whether an instrument is of a testamentary character (a), or is conditionally or unconditionally testamentary, a court of probate construes the will in the manner of a court of construction (b), and may receive evidence accordingly (c); and, further, may receive extrinsic evidence of the intention of the alleged testator with regard to the character of the instrument where that character is ambiguous (d).

Evidence admissible in probate.

1022. As a disposition of his property, a will is subject to any subsequent disposition inter vivos by the testator in his lifetime (e), and to the administration of his property for the payment by his representatives of death duties (f) and his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses after his death (g). The disposition made by a will need not come into operation immediately on the testator's death, but may, to the extent that dispositions in futuro are allowed, take effect at a future time (h). estate, except in so far as the executors, if any, appointed by the will represent the testator and take his estate, the effect of a will is not, in English law, the institution of an heir, but a gift of specific property (i). The donee takes by purchase, in the technical sense (k), though, as a rule, not in the ordinary sense of the words (l).

Conditions of an effectual gift by will.

1023. The following are necessary conditions that a gift by will may be effectual to confer a title to the property given on the donee (m):—

- (1) The testator must be dead (n).
- (2) The testator must have been a person who at the date of the will had the legal capacity to make a will (a).
- (3) At the time of making the will the testator must have had the intention to make it, so as to take effect upon his death (b). The gift will be defeated if the testator's mind was not free and unaffected by fear, fraud, or undue influence, or by any other matters which by law vitiate his intention (c).
- (4) The will must be made in the form and manner required by law (d).
- (5) The gift must not have been revoked (e) or altered (f), or if revoked must have been revived before the death of the testator (g).

1025. Though a will is always revocable (h), and the last will of a testator, notwithstanding any agreement, must always be his will, yet he may bind himself personally by an agreement as to the contents of his will, and may so bind his assets by such agreement that a person deriving title under his will or intestacy is a trustee for the performance of that agreement (i).

Accordingly, a contract duly evidenced (k) to make an ascertainable gift (l) by will is, as a rule, enforceable (m) usually by way of damages, which may be claimed the moment the covenantor has put it out of his power to perform the contract, even during his life (n). The court may order specific performance (o) of the contract against persons deriving title under the testator, if the contract is for valuable consideration and that remedy is appropriate in the circumstances (p); in such a case the court does not set aside a will not according to the contract, but can order the heir or devisee to convey the property according to the contract, and under the Trustee Act, 1893 (q), can make a vesting order or direct that someone shall convey for him if he refuses (r). intention to leave property by will, unless it amounts to a contract, is not enforceable (s). It appears that a covenant not to revoke a will is not enforceable in damages when the breach is occasioned by the marriage of the covenantor (t), but that otherwise there is no difference between such a contract and other agreements relating to wills as regards their binding effect (u). The covenantor's estate is not liable in damages if the provision made by him in pursuance of the contract is defeated by circumstances over which he has no control (a); but the covenantor cannot evade his obligation by disposing of the property during his life in a manner inconsistent with his contract by any instrument having the same effect as a testamentary disposition (b) or by purposely altering the nature of the property (c).

an instrument is applied the term "joint will," or in cases where on the death of each one of such persons mutual benefits are given to the survivors or survivor, the term "mutual will"; the term "mutual wills" is also applied to the wills of two or more persons, executed in separate documents, conferring mutual benefits on each other, in pursuance of some agreement between them (g).

Notwithstanding any agreement, the revocation of such a will or a subsequent will by any of the testators is valid for the purpose of the question what constitutes the will of that testator (h); subject to this, in general, the effect of joint or mutual wills and of the revocation of such wills is regulated by the agreement, if any, between the testators (i).

Part II.—Possible Subjects of Dispositions by Will.

SECT. 1.—Property which may be Dealt with.

General rule for any testator and any property.

1027. The extent to which a person may dispose by will of property belonging to him (k) depends, in the case of immovables, on the law of the place where they are situated (l), and in the case

(g) For examples, see Stone v. Hoskins, [1905] P. 194; and see In the Estate of Meyer, [1908] P. 353; Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., pp. 437, 438. As to joint and mutual wills generally, see Robertson v. Robertson (1909), 136 American State Reports, 589, 592, n.

(h) Hobson v. Blackburn and Blackburn (1822), 1 Add. 274; In the Estate of Heys, Walker v. Gaskill, [1914] P. 192.

(i) As to the effect of contracts relating to wills generally, see p. 514. ante. In Dufour v. Pereira (1769), 1 Dick. 419, as reported sub nom. Durour v. Perraro, 2 Hargrave, Juridical Arguments, 304. Lord CAMDEN, L.C., at p. 308, said that "a mutual will is a revocable act; it may be revoked by joint consent clearly; by one only, if he give notice, I can admit." The latter dictum, however, was made only by way of demurrer to the argument in that case. In Stone v. Hoskins, supra, it was held, following Lord CAMDEN's dicta, that the first testator to die need not stand by the bargain: and that a survivor would not be prejudiced in such a case, as he would have notice of revocation as from the death of the first, and consequently was not entitled to have either probate of the mutual will or a declaration that the executor under the later will should hold the property in trust for persons benefited under the mutual will.

* At all events, if a mutual will is not revoked during the joint lives by any open act, and is standing at the death of the first to die, and a survivor has taken a benefit by that death, the survivor cannot depart from the arrangement on his part (Dufour v. Pereira, supra; Stone v. Hoskins, supra, at pp. 196, 197). One of the testators has no right to revoke the provisions of a joint will so far as they concern the property of another of the testators, except by virtue of a power given to him, which operates as a contractual right, and not as a right incident to the nature of the will: see United Free Church of Scotland v. Black, [1909] S. C. 25, 29, 30; Ebden's Executors v. Ebdon, [1910] South African Law Reports (Appellate Division), 221.

(k) As to the exercise of general and special powers, see title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 18, 19.

of movables on the law of the domicile of the testator at his death (m). In this title it is assumed that in both cases there is no foreign element to consider, and the law of England is referred to.

SECT. 1.
Property

1028. By statute (n) a testator of full capacity (o) may dispose by a modern will of all real estate and all personal estate (p) to which he is entitled, either at law or in equity, at the time of his death (q), which if not so disposed of would devolve on the heir-at-law or (n) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3.

(o) As to testamentary capacity, see pp. 532 et seq., post, and as to wills of married women in particular, see p. 534, post.

(p) For the definitions of real and personal estate, see p. 508, ante.

(q) The will of a testator disposing of all his real estate operated at common law before 1535 (see note (c), p. 518, post) as an appointment or declaration of uses of specific hereditaments, and after stat. (1540) 32 Hen. 8. c. 1, and stat. (1542) 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 5, and prior to the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), as a conveyance of specific hereditaments it was essential in order to pass the land by the will that the testator should be seised of the land both at the date of the will and date of the death (A.-G. v. Vigor (1803), 8 Ves. 256, 283) : a will made after the testator was disseised was void as regards the lands of which he was so disseised, unless he afterwards re-entered, when the re-entry related back (Bunter v. Coke (1707), 1 Salk. 237; Shep. Touch. (ed Preston) 428). The will might comprise any after-acquired interests in such lands, which after the date of the will and before the death had become merged in the interest therein belonging to the testator at the date of the will; as, for instance, interests acquired by escheat (Bunter v. Coke, supra, at p. 238), or purchase of tenant's interests, or, in cases of the devise of a manor, a purchase of copyholds of the manor (Koe d. Hale v. Wegg (1796), 6 Term Rep. 708). Otherwise a will did not comprise real estate acquired subsequently to the date of the will, or even the legal estate in realty, to which the testator was entitled in equity, as under a contract for purchase, at the date of the will, and which was subsequently conveyed to him; in the latter case, however, the heir was held bound by a trust, and the equitable interest might be devised (Greenhill v. Greenhill (1712), 2 Vern. 679), although the equitable interest in lands comprised in a contract to purchase made after the date of the will could not be devised (Langford v. Pitt (1731), 2 P. Wms. 629; Gaskarth v. Lowther (Lord) (1805), 12 Ves. 107). The republication of the will, however, or the execution of a subsequent codicil confirming the will, operated to include in the devise all the real estate acquired between the dates of the will and the codicil (see p. 580, post). The effect of an intention clearly expressed by a testator to pass after-acquired property was to put the heir to his election between the benefits conferred on him by the will and the property afterwards acquired (Thellusson v. Woodford, Woodford v. Thellusson (1806), 13 Ves. 209, affirmed, sub nom. Kendallsham v. Woodford (1813), 1 Dow, 249, H. L.); but the heir was not put to election unless the intention was clear (Back v. Kett (1822), Jac. 534; see Churchman v. Ireland (1831), 1 Russ. & M. 250); as to election, see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., pp. 116 et seq. Leases for terms of years and other personal estate belonging to the testator at his death, though not at the date of his will, might pass by the will even before the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) (Bunter v. Coke, supra; Masters v. Masters (1718), 1 P. Wms. 421, 424; Wind v. Sekyl and Albome (1719), 1 P. Wms. 572, per PARKER, L.C., at p. 574). Leaseholds, except in the case of freehold leases for lives, might pass by a will showing an intention to dispose of them made even before the date of demise (Marwood v. Turner (1733), 3 P. Wms. 163; Carle v. Carle (1744), Amb. 28, 29; Abney v. Miller (1743), 2 Atk. 593, 599; Stirling v. Lydiard (1744), 3 Atk. 199; James v. Dean (1805), 11 Ves. 383, 390; (1808) 15 Ves. 236). The result of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), is, therefore, to render the law as to realty similar to that as to personalty in this respect.

customary heir of him, or, if he became entitled by descent, of his ancestor (r), or upon his executor or administrator (s).

1029. This right of disposition by will extends over the whole interest of the testator, so that he is able entirely or to any extent to exclude the rights of a surviving spouse (t), and of his heir or next of kin, as the case may be, to take his property on his death (u) by a will validly disposing of that property completely or to the required extent in favour of other objects of his bounty (v) capable of taking such bounty (a).

Examples.

1030. The following are examples of kinds of property (b) which may be thus disposed of:—

(1) Freeholds (c) held for any estate other than an estate tail or an estate ceasing with the life of the testator.

(r) Inglby v. Amcotts (1856), 21 Beav. 585; see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., p. 4. It has been suggested that where a testator dies without heirs, so that his realty cannot devolve on the heir-at-law of him or of his ancestor, the formalities of execution of the will should be in accordance with the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3) (Williams, Real Property, 18th ed., p. 55 n.; but see 22nd ed., p. 56, note (i)); but the words in the text are probably descriptive only of the kind of realty devisable, and should be read as though "if he had one" were inserted after "him" and "his ancestor." In Weatherall v. Thornburgh (1878), 8 Ch. D. 261, C. A., the will was assumed without discussion to be operative; compare Wentworth v. Humphrey (1886), 11 App. Cas. 619, 626, P. C. (construction of similar words in a colonial statute). The expressions in the repealed stat. (1542) 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 5, referred to persons "having a sole estate or interest in fee simple, or seised in fee simple in coparcenary or as tenants in common."

(u) For a sketch of the history of this unrestricted power of disposition, see note (c), infra, note (k), p. 519, post.

(v) As to the rule against disinheriting the heir etc., except expressly or by necessary implication, see p. 667, post; a clause merely excluding the next of kin (A.-G. v. Parkin (1769), Amb. 566; Sykes v. Sykes (1868), 3 Ch. App. 301), or merely directing that personalty shall devolve or pass to persons successively as realty (Re Walker, Macintosh-Walker v. Walker, [1908] 2 Ch. 705, per PARKER, J., at p. 712), is in itself inoperative. A clause excluding certain of the next of kin may be capable of being construed, however, as a gift to the persons entitled under the Statutes of Distribution (see title DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, Vol. XI., p. 16, note (o)), excluding the named persons (Vachell v. Breton (1707), 5 Bro. Parl. Cas. 51; Rund v. Green (1879), 12 Ch. D. 819).

(b) As to the double meaning of "property," see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 137. For forms of specific devises applicable to various kinds of property, see Encyclopædia of Forms and Precedents, Vol. XV., pp. 569 et seq.

(c) At common law, under the feudal system, no lands or tenements of freehold tenure were devisable by will, except, by custom, in some boroughs or in Kent (Littleton's Tenures, s. 167; Co. Litt. 111 b; Shop. Touch. (ed. Preston) 399, 420). The difficulty was obviated by the doctrine of uses: it was held that the use of the land might be devised, and accordingly by means of a feoffment to the uses of the testator's will made prior to the will, which operated as a declaration of the uses, a testator had, for all practical purposes, the right of devising the land itself (1 Sanders, Uses and Trusts, 64). The Statute of Uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 10) abolished this right, but by stat. (1540) 32 Hen. 8, c. 1, and stat. (1542) 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 5, express powers were given of devising, by a will in writing, all the lands of common socage tenure and two-thirds of lands of tenure in chivalry held by a testator for an "estate of inheritance," explained by the latter statute to mean "fee simple only," but as so explained judicially construed to include determinable fees (Cowper v. Frankline (1616), 3 Bulst. 184, per DODDERIDGE, J., and Coke, C.J., citing Cassandra's Case (Vernon v. Gatacre (1566), Dyer, 253 a)), and other modified fees other than fees tail; see, generally, title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 168 et seq. Stat. (1660) 12 Car. 2, c. 24, by converting tenure in chivalry into common socage, extended these powers. The Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 5, required all wills of lands, whether devisable by custom or by statute, to be executed with certain formalities, and (ibid., s. 12) extended the power of disposition by will to estates pur autre vie.

Examples of devisable incorporeal hereditaments are a seignory (Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 429) and gales in the Forest of Dean (see title MINES, MINERALS, AND QUARRIES, Vol. XX., p. 647).

(k) Up to the seventeenth century the power of disposing of personal estate by will was confined by custom, in the province of York, the City of London, and various districts of Wales, and perhaps in early times generally throughout the country (Bract. fo. 64 b; Kemps v. Kelsey (1722), Proc. Ch. 594, per Lord MACLESFIELD, L.C., at p. 596), in cases where the testator left a wife and children, to a third, and, in cases where he left either a wife only or children only, to a moiety of the testator's estate. In respect of the remainder of his estate, the wife and children had the writ de rationabili parte bonorum for division of it among them; the writ was issued, in early times, according to some authorities, as of right at common law, and in later times on proof of the special custom (Fitz. Nat. Brev. 9 b; 2 Bl. Com. 492; Sommer, Gavelkind, 91; Co. Litt. 176 b, note by Hargrave). By stat. (1693) 4 Will. & M. c. 2 and stat. (1703) 2 & 3 Anne, c. 5 (province of York, excepting Chester): stat. (1725) 11 Geo. 1, c. 18, s. 17 (London), and stat. (1695) 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 38 (Wales), the testamentary power was extended to the whole personalty of the testator, notwithstanding the respective customs in the districts concerned. In places where no such custom existed, or where the testator left neither wife nor children, the whole personalty could be bequeathed. As to customary heriots, mortuaries and corse-presents, see 2 Bl. Com. 473, 493; title BURIAL AND CREMATION, Vol. III., p. 431. COPYHOLDS, Vol. VIII., pp. 37 et seq. The testamentary power, in all cases, could be exercised without formality, or, as it was said, by a nuncupative will. The Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), ss. 18—21, restricted the power of making a nuncupative will of personalty over £30 in value, and the power was finally abolished, except in certain cases (see titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, Vol. XIV., pp. 161 et seq.; ROYAL FORCES, Vol. XXIV., pp. 94 et seq.), by the Wills

(l) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3, re-enacting and extending the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 12; see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 181. Under stat. (1542) 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 5, such an estate was not devisable (Gawen v. Ramtes (1601), Cro. Eliz. 804; Took v. Glascock (1669), 1 Saund. 250, 261). It is suggested in Hayes, Introduction to Conveyancing, p. 375; Jarman, Wills, 1st ed., p. 55; 6th ed., p. 74, that an estate pur autre vie limited to a man and the heirs of his body cannot be devised; that the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), has not altered the law previous to that Act, under which such an estate was not devisable on the ground that the entails of such an estate should, as nearly as possible, be put on the same footing as entails of lands of inheritance; see Blake v. Blake (1786), 3 P. Wms. 10, n.; Campbell v. Sandys (1803), 1 Sch. & Lef. 281, 291; Dillon v. Dillon (1809), 1 Ball & B. 77, 95, where it was put on the ground that the estate tail had determined; Blake v. Lutzon (1815), Coop. G. 178; Hopkins v. Ramage (1826), Batt. 365; Allen v. Allen (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 307, 326, dissenting from the dictum of Lord KENYON, that such an estate was devisable, in Dord. Blake v. Lurton (1795), 6 Term Rep. 289, 293. As to the analogy to entails of lands of inheritance, see, further, Re Barber's Settled Estates (1881), 18 Ch. D. 624, 629; Re Michell, Moore v. Moore, [1892] 2 Ch. 87. As to the nature of such an estate, see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 178, 180, note (r). The recommendations of the Real Property Commissioners (4th Report, pp. 23, 80), who proposed legislation expressly excepting estates pur autre vie held in quasi-entail, were not adopted on this point in the drafting of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3, which is in terms wider than their proposals.

(m) As to the creation of these interests, see, generally, titles PERSONAL PROPERTY, Vol. XXII., pp. 413 et seq.; REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., pp. 212 et seq., 278; SETTLEMENTS, Vol. XXV., pp. 570 et seq., as to executory bequests, see p. 527, post.

(n) Prior to the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), a contingent or executory interest could not be devised unless the testator was ascertained as the person in whom the interest must vest (Doe d. Calkin v. Tomkinson (1813), 2 M. & S. 165, 170).

3 Lev. 427, and 1 Roll. Abr. 609; Perry v. Phillips (1810), 17 Ves. 173, 182. Executory interests in terms of years were held devisable at an early period (Cole v. Moore (1607), Moore (K. B.), 806; Veizy v. Pinwell (1639), Poll. 44). In Jones v. Roed. Perry (1789), 3 Term Rep. 88, KENTON, C.J., distinguished a "bare" possibility, as the expectation of an heir or the next of kin of a living person, which is not a title to property in English law; see TITLES CHOSES IN ACTION, Vol. IV., p. 376; REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 238; under the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), such a possibility may be devised so as to pass on the death of the testator, provided that it has then ripened into an interest by the death of the named person before the testator (see Re Parsons, Stockley v. Parsons (1890), 35 Ch. D. 51; and see subdivision (9) in the text, infra; with these exceptions the testator's expectations under the will or intestacy of a living person cannot be disposed of by will; compare Isard v. Tamahau Mahupuku (1902), 22 New Zealand Law Reports, 418. As to the old law before the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), under which a right of entry for the purpose of revesting an estate divested by disseisin was not devisable, see Goodridge v. Fowler v. Forrester (1807), 8 East, 552, 566; Doe d. Souler v. Hull (1822), 2 Dow. & Ry. (K. B.) 38, where there was no disseisin; *Culley v. Doe d. (q) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3; Pemberton v. Barnes, [1899] 1 Ch. 544. At common law the possibility was not grantable (Stafford (Earl) v. Buckley (1751), 2 Ves. Sen. 17; per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at p. 180). The benefit of a right of entry on breach of condition was not devisable prior to the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26) (Avelyn v. Ward (1750), 1 Ves. Sen. 420, per Lord HARDWICKE, L.C., at pp. 422, 423). As to such interests generally, see TITLE REAL PROPERTY AND CHATTELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 237; they are not included in the executory or contingent interests mentioned in subdivision (6) in the text, p. 520, ante, but properly are vested interests, although for the purpose of the rule against perpetuities they have in certain cases been treated as contingent; see TITLE PERPETUITIES, Vol. XXII., pp. 314, 315.

Williamson*, supra). For certain statutory rights to bequeath emblements, see Statute of Merton (1235), 20 Hen. 3, c. 2 (widows); stat. (1536) 28 Hen. 8, c. 11, s. 6 (incumbents); Co. Litt. 556. (c) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3, substantially re-enacting the repealed stat. (1815) 55 Geo. 3, c. 192. Prior to the latter statute a surrender, made after admittance (Doe d. Tofield v. Tofield (1809), 11 East, 246) to the use of the will, was necessary; the earlier stat. (1540) 32 Hen. 8, c. 1, and stat. (1542) 34 & 35 Hen. 8, c. 5, did not include copyholds (Royden v. Mulster (1623), 2 Roll. Rep. 383), but as copyholds were not within the Statute of Uses (27 Hen. 8, c. 10) the method continued of surrendering the copyholds to the uses of the testator's will. An equitable interest in copyholds was devisable without this formality and might pass under a devise in general words if the intention to devise them was shown or could be inferred (Gibson v. Montfort (Lord), supra; Torre v. Browne (1855), 5 H. L. Cas. 555; Car v. Ellison, supra). Under stat. (1815) 55 Geo. 3, c. 192, copyholds might pass under a devise of real estate without the previous formality of a surrender (Doe d. Clarke v. Ludlam (1831), 7 Bing. 275).

The will may make the legatee a special executor with regard to the debt so as to be able to sue in his own name; and, in any event, the legatee may compel the executor to sue (Shep. Touch. (ed. In the case of negotiable instruments payable to the testator's order, the executors, subject to administration of the estate, are bound to indorse them, or to allow one of their number to indorse them, and to deliver them to the legatee in order to enable him to sue (*Re Robson, Robson v. tenant to take by survivorship (g). Under the modern law a gift of his interest in the property made by the will of one joint tenant during the joint tenancy may, in the event of the testator becoming before his death the surviving owner, be effectual to pass the property (r).

1035. Apart from the execution by will of a power (s), a testator cannot effectually (t) dispose by will of property which is not his own (a), or which he holds in a representative or official capacity (b), as, for example, heirlooms, which are such by custom (c); real estate in which the testator has merely an estate tail (d); property bound by the covenant of the testator to devolve in some other manner (e); or personal rights belonging to the reversioner for the time being under a lease for years, where the testator is a tenant for life of the reversion who dies without reducing them into possession (f).

The devolution of trust or mortgage estates is now, notwithstanding any disposition by will, subject to statutory rules (g).

Crabb* (1834), 1 My. & K. 511; Turner v. A.-G. (1876), 10 L. R. Eq. 386, 392. The share would not, in default of disposition, devolve on the heir or executor within the meaning of the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3. Questions may arise, however, whether the joint tenant is bound under the doctrine of election (Dummer v. Pulcher (1831), 5 Sim. 35; (1833), 2 My. & K. 262; Coates v. Stevens (1834), 1 Y. & C. (Ex.) 66; Grosvenor v. Duxton (1858), 25 Beav. 97).

(r) Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 3, 24. Before that Act a will of a joint tenant of real property, made during the joint tenancy, did not operate even to pass his share to which he became entitled in severalty on a subsequent partition, unless the will were republished (Swift v. Neale d. Roberts (1764), 3 Burr. 1488, explaining Perkins, Laws of England, s. 500). The law is now rendered similar to that concerning personal property before the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), which was as stated in the text (Shep. Touch. (ed. Preston) 430). As to the construction of a will in this respect, see p. 691, post.

(s) See title POWERS, Vol. XXIII., pp. 1 et seq.

(t) Such a disposition may, however, raise a question of election; see title EQUITY, Vol. XIII., p. 116.

Eq. 68, 80; and see title REAL PROPERTY AND CHATELS REAL, Vol. XXIV., p. 264. The property in such cases does not descend to the heir general of the testator under the Wills Act, 1837 (7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 26), s. 3; see p. 517, ante. See also Jerningham v. Cornwallis (1592), Cro. Eliz. 236; and note (c), p. 518, ante. 1036. No person can make a binding disposition of his own dead body, so as to oust the executors' right to the custody and possession of it and their duties relating to disposal of it (h); but by statute a direction for the anatomical examination of his body after death may in certain cases be effective (i).

1037. Those rights of action which do not on death devolve on the personal representative, or which come to an end with the life of the owner, cannot be disposed of by will (k).

The powers of nomination, conferred by the rules of a friendly society, over the sums payable on death of a member operate as powers of appointment and may give the member no right of property in the sum assured (l). By the terms of a policy of assurance the money payable thereunder may not be subject to the right of disposition by the assured's will (m). Such a limitation of a testator's power of disposition by will is valid not only against persons claiming under the will (n), but against creditors (o).

Similarly, a testator may have no right, or only a restricted right, to dispose by will of shares in a company under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (a), and any amending statutes (b), if the articles of association of the company so provide (c).

A covenant against assignment in a lease is not in general construed so as to forbid a disposition of the term by the will of the tenant (d).

1038. By statute a testator cannot, by a will made after the 31st December, 1865 (if abroad there is an extension of time), and previously to his entering into service as a seaman or mariner, dispose of any wages, prize money, bounty money, grant, or other allowance in the nature thereof, or other money payable by the Admiralty or any effects or money in charge of the Admiralty (e).
